Let's Talk It Over

Delivering an address to young people, even those in the high school grades, requires a special technique which, unfortunately, many otherwise talented speakers do not have. Youth does not have the receptive attitude towards speakers which you find in older people. The majority of them will not make any effort to concentrate on what you are saying. Your words, especially your introductory remarks, must take them by the ears, as it were, and say to them: Listen to this. This is going to be good. Speakers who are able to hold an adult audience enthralled sometimes completely fall when they are talking in front of the slightly dizzy representatives of this madcap age. (Every age is madcap if you are looking at it through the thick-rimmed glasses of advanced middle age.)

A contemporary of Samuel Johnson had this adverse criticism to offer: "He makes little fishes talk like whales." Johnston's sonorous style, though powerful and picturesque, probably deserved that you must reverse this process. Make whales talk like little fishes. And you must get your message over without diluting it too much while you are adopting this technique.

Dr. Frank MacKinnon of Prince of Wales College spoke to the students of Summerside Friday morning on the subject "United Nations." A subject such as this can be handled in such a way that even if delivered to adults will produce profound soporific effects. The trouble with young boys and girls, they do not go to sleep, or withdraw into the recesses of their own private thoughts, if the handling of the address is flavoured with asprin. They organize their own little gossip groups instead, and the chairman has to use all his resources of command to keep the buzz down to respectable levels. The S.H.S. pupils were possibly expecting the worst when Dr. MacKinnon got up to talk to them, but the doctor is evidently adroit in the technique of arresting the attention of the young, for from his very first words he held their attention and, we feel sure, conciliated the choir rendered "The King of the Mountains." The special feature was the playing of an accord by Dr. James H. Robinson, B.D., L.H.D., one of the speakers at the Dominion Board of the United Church. He is the founder of the Master in New York City and is greatly interested in foreign missions having visited Europe, the Near East and Asia in this cause. This was his first visit to Canada, having travelled 100,000 miles in the United States bringing his message of his experiences. Refreshments were served by the group in charge.—S

The Yugoslav foreign ministry called the Italian offer "obvious hypocrisy" and a "back-door move" to take over a A of Trieste under the protection of occupation troops.

There are about three divisions of troops on either side of the border. They were sent there after the United States and Britain decided to hand over zone A to Italian administration. President Tito of Yugoslavia threatened to march into zone A if Italian troops move in, and later proposed a conference of Britain, the United States, Italy and Yugoslavia to settle the matter.

The newspaper Giornale de Trieste said Monday: "Tito has thrown off his mask and shown his true face as a madened dictator.

"Tito is keeping all the cards and intends to play them as and when he thinks fit. This is what is known as the strategy of permanent blackmail."

Yugoslav vice-president Eduard Kardelj said Monday his country is prepared to make new sacrifices to reach a just solution of the Trieste problem.

In an article in the Yugoslav Communist newspaper Borda, he said the opposing view of the countries concerned might be reconciled considerably before holding Tito's proposed conference.

He said the conference would run a greater risk of failure if it discussed the Trieste issue as a whole instead of the present tense situation. Failure, he added, "could most seriously jeopardize the settlement of the whole question and sharpen relations between Yugoslavia and the Western powers."

S'side Kinsmen Plan Two Parties On Hallow'e'en

—With kiddies dressed in all kinds of weird costumes, Hallow'e'en will again be observed this coming Saturday evening. Putting a measure of control in to the festivities, while at the same time adding to the wholesome entertainment for the children, the Summerside Kinsmen Club has planned two big parties at the Summerside High School for the children on Hallow'e'en.

The first one is being held for the little tots up to 8 years of age, and the show will be exclusively theirs from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m. at which time they will be allowed to head for home and those from 8 years of age and older will have their turn to enjoy the full program of fun and laughter that is being prepared by the Kinsmen organization under the chairmanship of Mr. Chester MacDonal.

Each party will have its games and movies, and every child present will receive a bag of candy and fruit.

In preparation for this, the Kinsmen members are busy preparing more than 1000 of these bags to give to the children who attend the program.

In addition to this there will be first, second, and third prizes for the best costumes at each party, and there will be other prizes given to winners of various contests that will be held.

Under sponsorship of the Summerside Kinsmen Club these Hallow'e'en parties have become a yearly event. In providing this entertainment the Kinsmen Club has been able to direct the youthful enthusiasm inspired by Hallow'e'en, and prevent injury and accident on this night when an unusually large number of children are out for enjoyment.

This year because Hallow'e'en falls on Saturday evening—albeit a busy night of heavy traffic—it was decided to dispense with the usual children's parade, and instead, they will all go directly from their homes to the High School.—S

The governor-general will wear his plumed hat and ceremonial black and white uniform with sword for the opening ceremony. The uniform is worn by representatives of the crown in the various countries of the Commonwealth.
