

WORTH AND TO RECOGNIZE THE DIFFERENCE between a water pump and attraction in human relations, and to wash your hands of Barry's position, appeal, you will probably make every mistake in the book, in respect to both boys.

My advice is to lower the boom on Barry. Have nothing whatever to do with him. Now you are the chances of your heading that.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Several months ago I quarreled with the boy I love, because I had an accusation to make. I told him I felt like slapping him, and he said, "Go ahead." So I did. Then he struck me in the face with his fist, several times. I had a bad bruise on my eye, a swollen jaw and cuts inside my cheeks, which took over a week to heal.

Although I admit dealing the first blow, would a man hit a woman if he really cared for her? Would a real gentleman walk away, or react in any way?

I've discussed this with a couple of friends who say, "I assure you, if you really did care like a lady, you couldn't expect him to react like a gentleman. What do you think about this?"

DEAR A.B.: Your friends are hardy counsellors. They seem eager to rub salt in your wounds, to make you feel worse instead of better, about the ugly incident described.

They don't know "from both sides" about gentlemanly conduct. A gentleman behaves as a gentleman—a gentleman is a kindly protective care towards weaker creatures—even if sorely tried.

Your boy friend (so-called) wasn't a gentleman before the quarrel started, or he would have invited you to a ball with a bass accordion (unfounded). I take it he was a gentleman before, but then punishing you with his fist, he was behaving in a way which was not gentlemanly, simply because that's the way he is—so stop blaming yourself.

WATER SAFETY Supported By York Institute

A complete testing of all supplies of water in York County of Health has been arranged by the safety committee of the York Women's Institute.

Swimming classes for school children are to be held this summer, and the water safety and related activities, outlined by Mrs. Henry Leard, have invited you to a ball with a bass accordion (unfounded). I take it he was a gentleman before, but then punishing you with his fist, he was behaving in a way which was not gentlemanly, simply because that's the way he is—so stop blaming yourself.

Socking His Girl-Friend Not a 'Gentleman's' Act

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I will be 16 in July. There are two boys whom I like very much; but I am not sure of either. I like more.

The knave Chuck for four years and he treats me wonderful. He is in the Navy and will be home for a week later this month. He wants me to marry him when I am 19 and a graduate. He loves me and I love him.

I know Barry for a month and I really love him. But I am not sure he loves me. He doesn't act like I. Also with his friends are around he talks filthy, humiliating me in what he says.

When I go to dances where he always is he ignores me when I am dancing; or if not, if he talks with me, he talks like a stoob, which hurts my pride.

I wrote to Chuck about my interest in Barry and he suggests that I ask Barry's consent to date going steady with Chuck during this week here, and then I can decide between them. A lady says he will always love me, no matter what. But I am afraid Barry will get mad and I don't know if I really love me, or if you think he would not do it, just so I would be sure of myself. Every night I cry, wondering about what to do. I am getting sick from crying so much. I am afraid of losing Barry but I don't like the thought of never seeing Chuck either. Please help me, and answer quickly, as it is very important.

DEAR P.P.: As I get the wonderful. Barry is a bad egg. And you are making a fool of yourself when I throw myself at his head (or his feet) which explains why he treats you as a dirty joke, more or less, in the presence of his friends.

Obviously he doesn't respect you. He is only with you plainly means, in other words, that he doesn't love you at all. At most, he only tolerates you because he is alone with you, he is disposed to make love. I suppose, in this respect, you are a question mark. When you are alone with you, he is disposed to make love. I suppose, in this respect, you are a question mark.

When you are alone with you, he is disposed to make love. I suppose, in this respect, you are a question mark.

Tractors Are Serviced For Spring Cropping

Dampish this day was, with dewy droplets pendant on blades, and a filmy mist draped along the hills. In a gesture to the approaching spring, work our tractor was taken off to be serviced.

"And then James, husband of ours, off he'd, watching it make its way through a water ditch, the few meadows as it moved onward, 'is the beginning of things'."

"The opening chapter" we chuckled.

He nodded. Smiled. And looked off over the old fields.

"It's hope it will be a nice story we said... And when it ends, the thought came to mind, when last leaves have fallen and the crickets have played the final theme, may we not hear a lone lullaby in the wind, or see a blackness in the first snowfall, but rather a hope of another springtime ahead."

"I'm thinking the days will turn so busy shortly, we shan't have time to enjoy the croppin' he smiled wistfully. "And he there was last spring. Indeed, time to get it under way. Think of the tanks of gas it will take, the oils and the greases — to say nothing of the lime and fertilizers and seeds."

"There'll be more virtue in the grain - seeds this spring, than there was last spring. Indeed, it's amazing in the light of the hipper harvest of the autumn, and before that, so many ungerminated and grew as well."

"We could test some one of these times," he suggested, "and would give some idea of their germination, and we could, even though all might sprout, not all live to mature. Last spring there was many a seedling too weak to continue to grow."

His eyes were on the fields. We suspected thoughts of former springtimes were in mind. "It would be... or would it be nice to be putting in the crop with the team, as we used to be?"

"Oh, I don't know," he replied. "At least it would lighten the over-head! As things are nowadays, every chug of a motor, every sound of a machine on farm, means an outlay, and no light one either."

The farming costs in our part of the country are freighted in part by the various premiums of the life and living we enjoy. None within the country's laws are more free. We have our homes — the same that grow dearer as the years go by. We tend herbs and flocks of our own choosing. From our woodlots we may harvest, with no one to say nay, such trees as we wish. On our fields, we may cultivate — observing perhaps in an except — on the location of potato — lands such crops as we favor.

Freedom we have to work today, if I need be postpone it till tomorrow. And always, even on the busiest of farms, there is time to rest and chat, time to encourage or sympathize with another, time to do what we like, time to just stand and stare and reflect on the blessings and priviledges that are ours. "A time and times" — and now at our day's close, a benediction.

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good — night —

Bring Home The Bacon For Culinary Touches

CARTONS of milk are used to a standard weight at least 2 pounds and, unless plastic-lined, are likely to leak. It is also necessary to rush the milk as soon as possible from the supermarket or source supply to the home refrigerator. To keep it from becoming overheated in warm weather, it is best to buy it from a store which has solved this problem. We hope other states will follow suit.

These drive in milk markets, selling milk, cream, butter and cheese are likely to large shipping centers or on the heavy traffic routes commencing from their way home from work.

The shopper drives up to the milk and places the order. The uniformed attendant collects the items and loads them in the cart. The attendant has changed to large shopping cart. Consequently milk sales are up for customers will buy when buying is made easy.

Major Changes In Guiding Depicted At Annual Meet

"Let us look upon Guiding as an adventure, and although it may bring fear, frustration, and regret, these are over-shadowed by looking beyond to the wonderful wealth of opportunity Guiding offers us. Help us to see that we, our Guiding and on to our successors as handed on as strong as it is firm and true."

This was the plea of E. Henrietta Oler, Chief Commissioner of the Guides of Canada when she spoke at Government House on April 11 of this year. She talked at length on the entire Guiding movement, both here in Canada and around the world, to emphasize the importance of changes made in the national organization recently.

Changes include the titular change to Girl Guides of Canada, the acquiring of national headquarters in Toronto, and the adoption of a new uniform.

At the rally a number of Guides received Gold Cord, the highest award in Guiding. These were presented by Miss Oler to Rosemary Perry of Summersburg, and Susan Elizabeth Judy MacKenzie, Donna Midford and Sharon Scheffelmeyer, all of Summersburg.

All-round cords went to Susan Campbell, Patsy Deacon, and Jane Stewart of Charlottetown. Mac's a c of the Sherwood-Parkdale district, and Cathy MONTREAL, April 16th — It's far wiser to borrow on your savings than it is to spend them on a major purchase. When you borrow on the low-cost BANK OF MONTREAL Family Plan, you can pay by convenient monthly instalments tailored to your individual income. The advantage of this is that when your loan is paid off you have a satisfaction knowing that you have saved more than you spent. If it is to spend them, the people at your local branch of "My Bank" will be glad to explain this modern Family Finance Plan. See them soon!

THE 'Forever' Was '97 Years

TORONTO (CP)—More than 80 entries have been received in a contest for new lyrics for the Maple Leaf Forever, George Salverston, office manager of the Canadian Authors Association, said Tuesday.

He said submissions have come from as far away as Argentina, with about 40 from the United States, since the contest was announced last fall. Before the contest closes May 24, the association expects at least 200 more entries.

Purpose of the contest is to find modern lyrics for the Maple Leaf Forever. The original words were written by Alexander Muir, a Toronto school principal, in 1867.

A Toronto music publishing firm will publish the winning entry and pay its author $1,000 advance on royalties.

The association recently received a protest from the Alexander Muir Girls Association, claiming the contest was an affront and an indignity to Mr. Muir.

Mr. Salverston said a letter to the girls association explaining the contest was sent so much since 1867 that the lyrics are not as suitable as they once were. I think they understand our project better now."

THE BEST BREAD EACH MORNING... AND ALL DAY TOO!

ING. IN PLASTIC COMBINE with a solid oil, 5 tbsp. cider vinegar, 1/4 tsp. each dry mustard and salt, and 1/4 tsp. pepper. Shake until well mixed.

BEEF PATTIES

3/4 lbs. Fresh chopped beef (chuck or any form of beef-steak)

1 tsp. seasoned salt
1/2 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
1 tsp. vegetable oil
1 tsp. butter
2 tbsp. onion
1 tbsp. butter, additional
6 slices crisp bacon

Pickled beets and dill pickle for garnish

Combine beef and seasonings. Mix and work together until almost smooth with the back of wooden spoon. Shape into 6 flat patties 1/4 inch thick. Heat oil and butter together. Sauté patties 4 min. on each side for medium, a little longer for well done.

Make pan gravy by adding 1/2 cup flour to pan drippings. Swirl in 1/2 cup butter or margarine, preferably whipped.

Arrange on heated platter. Pour over pan gravy. Top each patty with slice of bacon. Garnish: pickled beets and sliced dill pickle.

THE CHEF'S TRICKS WITH BACON

To slice bacon thin, chill thoroughly and use thin, sharp knife.

Half- fry or broil bacon slowly well in advance, and refrigerate until needed. Then finish cooking, so service can be quick.

Bacon that is properly baked or broiled lies in nice even pieces, so use this method. Place bacon on rack in pan, so fat drips out; otherwise, if fried in its own fat, it overcooks and curls up.

A single slice of crisp bacon per serving can give appetizing luxury taste to many an everyday dish, such as potato pancakes, grilled sweet potatoes, macaroni and cheese, or hash
