recognition of mental illness, of his misinterpretations of it, and of his failures and success in treating it would fill more volumes than you have time to read. Looking back over the ages we can see five major trends develop in medicine, particularly in relation to the mentally ill. First, during the period when illness was not understood and people attributed their afflictions to malicious demons. The physician-priest-magicians were so concerned with frightening bad demons that their treatment degenerated to persecution of the sick.

"Secondly, the beginning of hospitals and asylums which resulted in segregation of the mentally ill. As the practice of medicine became more clearly defined, it began to assume the aspects of a true science. It educated society to pity instead of condemnation, and at the end of the 18th century, the humanitarian attitude toward the sick indicated the third major trend in medicine. By the time the 20th century had begun, medical science had advanced enough to prevent a fourth trend—the prevention of illness.

"We realize the illness is always an abnormal state of both the body and the mind, that treatment of illness must always concern the whole individual, and that health is a state which results only when the whole individual functions adequately. With the close of World War II there has been another trend. It has to do with the realization that the correlation between the individual and society needs greater understanding, and, very probably, some treatment. War, race prejudice, political bias, and religious intolerance are the mental illnesses of society—and they are brought about by the emotions of the individuals who comprise society.

First Mental Hospital in P. E. I.

"On our own island, the first hospital for the mentally ill was opened in 1848 and in 1874 there were 64 patients in the institution. During that time, no hope of improvement was entertained as no treatment had been attempted, unless a few sleepless and noisy patients could be called tranquilized. It was estimated that many more mentally ill were given custodial care in jails and scattered through their families in the Province.

"Hospitals are now regarded, as beyond comparison, the best place for the treatment of the mentally ill. Comparatively few cases recover when treated at home surrounded by the familiar faces of the friends. Often the distorted imagination of the individual affected with the illness, the sight of faces and surroundings familiar and pleasing to him in health, are continual sources of annoyance and irritation to him while laboring under his disease.

"It is a proposition universally admitted, that it is the first interest of every country, to preserve itself, to develop its own strength, and to sustain it to the fullest degree. The strength and wealth of the country are the aggregate of the wealth and power of the individuals who compose it. If a member of a community is strong, his strength increases the power of the country. If he be a producer and create riches, this adds so much to the common wealth. If, on the contrary, he becomes sick, or weak, and loses his power of production, his loss of personal power takes so much from the general power. His failure to add to his own estate, is so much loss to the general prosperity. If, more than this, he loses power to provide for his own wants, his support becomes a charge upon the property that he or others have created, or are at the time creating. If his own means or those of his family are insufficient for this purpose, then the public treasury must, and does, assume the burden.

Psychotic Patients

"In dealing with psychotic patients the nurse must be ready to encounter any kind of unusual situation and to meet any emergency of behaviour. This requires great prudence, great tact, and great poise. It requires unusual skill in understanding, in dealing with the psychology of the patient, and power to win confidence and to suggest procedures. You will have to accommodate your selves to them and never attempt to change their habits and manners about a person on the bed of sickness, but "make yourselves all things to all men".

"In our awe of the advances made by science, and of new discoveries in medicine, there is a tendency to overlook the contribution that has always been made by good doctors and nurses. Something of the secret of the greatness of scientists can be found in the words of the great benefactor of humanity, Sir Frederick Banting, so tragically lost to the world in 1941. He once said: "It is not within the power of the properly constituted mind to be satisfied. Progress would close if this were the case. The greatest joy in life is to accomplish. It is getting not giving; it is giving not keeping."

"During your nursing work you will have knowledge of many things which are regarded as secrets. Learn to appreciate the gold of silence and the beauty of reticence and reserve. In this way you will show your loyalty to your patient who expects as much from you in this regard as he does from his physician. The discreet and trustworthy nurse becomes a discreet and trustworthy person, one who can always be relied upon to be silent not only in her capacity as a nurse but also in her private life.

"You have now reached the goal of at least one of your ambitions in life, and I congratulate you. But do not rest here. If at all possible, continue to study the great art of nursing. The foundation has been laid, the superstructure has not yet been completed. No graduate of any school or in any profession is a know-all in that field. May you grow in the future in your chosen sphere of nursing as you have done during your training days. The nurse is indispensable in the case of the sick. True she is the handmaid of the physician. The nurse is the mental patient's closest contact, with reality. I am convinced that you have acquitted yourself well in this regard.

"Lastly I would advise you to model your service on that of a contemporary model, Queen Elizabeth II, whose coronation has preceded your graduation. In her practice of self-discipline in meeting all kinds of people graciously, she does not exclude all personal feelings. The qualities she displays are those required of truly great nurses."

Great Responsibility

The burden of supporting the mentally ill is constant, unavoidable, and very great. It is the first claim of humanity, as well as the interest of the public to keep the number of these as small as possible, by having all that can be healed in the curable state of their disorder, and allowing none but those whose disease is primarily incurable, to fall into chronic and permanent mental illness. "It must be remembered that the cost of restoration is not additional expense to the people as they (the mentally ill) were already thrown upon a community and its individual members, who are responsible for their maintenance whether they are sent to the hospital or not; whether any attempt was, or was not made to cure them. The country collectively, or its estates separately, must pay the cost of their board, care and guardianship. "We can lose nothing by our charities in this direction. Let us not only provide ample accommodation for all our mentally ill, but let us so locate our mental hos-

Local Rotarians Hear Interesting Talk on Tour

Rev. Stuart Merriam of Zion Presbyterian Church was guest speaker at the weekly luncheon meeting of the Rotary Club held at the Charlottetown Hotel yesterday which was presided over by Mr. T. G. Ives, who introduced the speaker.

Rev. Mr. Merriam gave a most interesting account of a tour he made in company with his brother, through England, Ireland, Scotland, France and Italy, which culminated in a visit to the Holy Land.

The speaker described the difficulties with passports on arriving at Beirut and the fascinating country into which "Christian history is not written but plowed." He explained that the Holy Land area is only a trifle larger than P. E. Island, and that Palestine, the centre of the ancient world, immensely wealthy, containing as it does, two-thirds of the world's oil. The speaker described the drift back to Palestine of the Jewish people after two thousand years of persecution. "Between 1920 and 1948, the population there has increased from 60,000 to 600,000," said the speaker "which gives a total of 750 per square mile as compared with 40 persons per square mile in the United States." The travelers visited Tyre and Sidon and looked upon the few remaining Cedars of Lebanon, one of which is said to be 5,000 years old. Damascus, the oldest city with a continuous world history was a point of call. The Jerico Road which winds 3,000 feet in 15 miles was also found most fascinating. Bethlehem, and Jerusalem were also visited. "The most impressive sight on our whole tour was an old hill on the outskirts of Jerusalem," Mr. Merriam said "which looked like a human skull. It is called Golgotha, and the irony of the situation is that this place is wholly occupied as a Mohammedan cemetery, nothing but a symbol, a graveyard."

The speaker was thanked for his informative and interesting talk by the co-chairman, Brigadier Reid, who also expressed the hope that Rev. Mr. Merriam would enjoy his summer sojourn in this province. Stan McInnis explained the Air Show which the R.C.A.F. Association was sponsoring here in mid-July and when volunteers were asked for to provide transportation. Mr. W. A. Stewart took on the job to see that the children of Mt. Herbert Orphanage were provided with conveyances and Brigadier Reid agreed to arrange the same for the children at St. Vincent's. Brigadier Reid announced that the British High Commissioner would be guest speaker at a cooperative dinner meeting here on July 20, in which the Provincial Government, the Board of Trade and other organizations are taking part. He also reminded the members of the forthcoming Carnival by the King-Reid Shows as a community project in the interest of the young people. Guests present were Messrs. H. A. Ebers, City, J. Clifford McIsaac, Rocky Point, Wilfred Keeton, Professor of Journalism, Carleton College, Ottawa, Dr. V. East, Geologist, Ottawa, and Rotary Past President Steve Saunders of Everett, Wash., who had as his guest, his son Stephen of the same city.

Employment of Patients

"While it is the duty of the country to provide for and take care of every citizen who may be afflicted with mental illness, on the other hand it is no more than right, that they should make the burden as light as possible; although we do not believe in making patients work for the profits of their labor, yet, when they have been accustomed to labor on the farm, in the garden, or in shops at home, and when they are well enough to perform this labor at the Mental Hospital Farm, not only without detriment, but with advantage to their health and improvement in their mental condition, it should be exacted from them, the Superintendent being in all cases the judge as to the results. In most of the Mental Hospitals in our country, too little employment is given to the body and too little occupation to the mind, to prevent a state of ennui that naturally follows the occupation of doing nothing.

"Showing kindness to those who are ill was practically unheard of in the early centuries and was certainly not tolerated when it related to those who were mentally ill. The crime of having lost one's mind doomed the individual forever to dungeon cells and cruel treatment. "With good reason, therefore, people have been led to the fear of the diagnosis of mental illness, and it is only through education that their concepts can be changed. As nurses you have an unusual opportunity to promote such education. Upon your attitudes and overtures depend much of the subsequent reactions of patients. In addition to the technical skill required of you, each of you must assume the position of teacher, leader and model of mental hygiene.

Psychotic Patients

"In dealing with psychotic patients the nurse must be ready to encounter any kind of unusual situation and to meet any emergency of behaviour. This requires great prudence, great tact, and great poise.
