

Last Of American Marines Leave Dominican Republic

SANTO DOMINGO (AP)—The last of the U.S. marines in the Dominican Republic left Sunday. They boarded ships at the nearby port of Haina for the trip back to Camp Lejeune, N.C. Brig-Gen. John Bouker, commander of the force of nearly 6,000 men, remained briefly to accept the Legion of Merit for his leadership of the marine contingent.

The marines began landing in the Dominican Republic April 28, four days after the revolt began. It was the first time U.S. troops had been sent to Latin America since the marine occupation of neighboring Haiti ended in 1934.

The marines occupied the Dominican Republic from 1916 to 1924 in an era when U.S. military intervention in Latin America was frequent.

Bouker, who received the decoration from army Lt-Gen Bruce Palmer, commander of the U.S. forces in the Dominican Republic, left later by plane for the United States. Still under Palmer's command are 12,500 airborne troops and 700 air force men, now part of the new inter-American peace force to be sent to the Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Honduras and Nicaragua.

On the political front, Gen. Antonio Imbert attended a rally for his civilian-military junta in the northern coffee-growing centre of Moca, as both Dominican factions stepped up their campaigns to win popular support.

A bomb exploded harmlessly near the crowd of 500. Police detained two suspects. Moca is 92 miles north of Santo Domingo.

It was the junta chief's first trip beyond the outskirts of

Quebec Gov't, Firms Help Train Engineers

MONTREAL (CP)—Government and industry have joined forces in promoting a university scheme to provide Quebec's prospective geological and mining engineers with extensive practical field experience.

The project, successful during a May tryout, gave students from the University of Montreal's polytechnical institute the opportunity for 18 days of serious field exercises covering all aspects of their course in an Eastern Townships mining region.

The project has attracted industry support because of its potential to train more and better engineers, now scarce.

The provincial government believes the course will improve the chances of further mineral discoveries in Quebec and will interest French-Canadians, few of whom have entered the field.

French-Canadian engineers aren't even providing enough geological and mining engineers to replace those who are growing older or who are leaving the profession," says Roger Blais, director of geology and a University of Montreal professor.

"Prospecting and mine operation are areas which, for all practical purposes, French-Canadians still have not entered."

TRIPS MAY BE REGULAR

Although in a sense a pilot project, field trips such as the one undertaken in May are expected to become permanent features of the University of Montreal course.

The eight students who participated in the field exercises with their professors were given training in surveying, sampling and analysis. They also participated in the actual extraction from open pits and underground of lead, zinc, copper and a little gold and silver.

Modern electronic detecting devices were provided, a far cry from the traditional geological hammer.

Although taken to an area where evidence of mineral wealth is abundant, the students were required to establish concrete proof of the existence of a lode.

Previously, the only field trips connected with the course were outings on Montreal's Mount Royal to collect samples and examine rock formations. Authorities say this added little valuable practical experience to theory taught in class.

In addition to the university project, other Quebec educational institutions are beginning to offer attractive courses stressing the almost unlimited opportunity for young people interested in a geological career.

Mr. Blais says the most critical need is for geological engineers—the modern prospectors—to make the discoveries necessary to expansion of the mining industry of those entering the profession now, most choose mining engineering, he says.

The mining firms particularly connected with the University of Montreal project are Noranda Mines and the Beaudin group whose facilities were used by the students.

highly successful when declarer, seizing the opportunity to take a free finesse, played the jack from dummy, East covering with the queen.

Declarer took the king and also took a club finesse, which just East then forced out the ace of hearts and South eventually went down when East scored the ace of diamonds and his remaining hearts.

West's opening lead certainly turned out well, but it would not have been successful if declarer had reacted properly. South's play of the jack of hearts at trick one was completely wrong, since it opened the avenue to defeat in a hand where he could have guaranteed the contract 100 per cent by playing the five from dummy.

While South had no good reason to suspect a short-suit lead from West, he should have provided against this possibility, by playing low from dummy. He could then take a club finesse, not caring much whether it lost, since East, in such case, would be unable to make a damaging return.

South could then force out the ace of diamonds to assure at least ten tricks, and do all this without the slightest risk of jeopardizing the contract.

The "free finesse" wasn't really free at all.
