DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE—Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this example A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

A Cryptogram Quotation

A L V Q P Z D Z P W P A E T Q L A C Q C T W D A
W V M V D D T A X — D T B P W T Z V D.

Yesterday's Cryptoquote: EVIL COMES OF OMISSION AS WELL AS COMMISSION—M. AURELIUS ANTONINUS.

ON THE JOB

Each has his own appointed way.
And certain rules he must obey.
—Old Mother Nature.

It was the edge of the evening. The Black Shadows were stealing out from the Purple Hills behind which they had spent the day, and were spreading through the Green Forest and over the Old Pasture. Pretty soon they would cover the Green Meadows. Then a lot of timid little folk would be happy, no longer afraid to run about in search of food, to play and to visit their friends as it had been with them all through the bright day. True, there were dangers at night, but not nearly as many as through the day.

At the Smiling Pool there was still light enough for Rattles the Kingfisher to be sure he could catch another little fish if one should come his way. He needed another. He really did. He had been fishing hard all day, and while fishing can be no work at all, there are times when it can be very hard work. This day had been one of those times for Rattles. For Mrs. Rattles, too. You see, in their home deep in a sandbank by the Big River, were ten growing young Kingfisher none of whom seemed ever to get filled up.

So ever since daylight Rattles had been watching for and diving for little fish called Minnows, fish so small that they could be swallowed whole. Now he was watching for one more, this to be for himself, for he had eaten little all day long. Whenever he caught a fish, there was always a hungry mouth in the sandbank waiting for it.

He saw a Minnow. He shot down, but just before he reached the water the Minnow darted away. He checked himself and flew back to his perch. Just then Peter Rabbit arrived from the dear Old Briar-patch.

"Aren't you fishing rather late?" asked Peter. "Couldn't catch enough during the day?"

Rattles looked down at Peter. "Have you ever tried to catch enough fish for ten growing children?" he asked.

"Don't be silly. You know I don't catch fish. I don't catch anything I don't have to, thank goodness," retorted Peter.

"I forgot, replied Rattles. "What I mean is, have you ever tried to keep ten children fed with whatever it is you do eat?"

"I don't feed my children at all. They feed themselves. I don't feed anybody but myself," declared Peter.

Rattles shook his tousled head. "If you ask me, some folks have things pretty easy," said he.

"I didn't ask you, retorted Peter. "I don't believe in spoiling children, doing for them what they should do for themselves. My children feed themselves from the time they begin to hop about and that's the way it should be. If you would let those ten youngsters go hungry for a while, they would soon learn to feed themselves. That is the way it should be with all children."

"Haven't you forgotten something?" asked Rattles.

"What?" Peter wanted to know.

"That some folks have to work for what they eat. If you had to catch your food instead of having it right under your nose all the time, you would know why some children must be fed while they are learning how to catch their own food. All your children have to do is to help themselves to green things growing all around them. My children can't do that. Fish are not laying around waiting to be picked up. They must be caught before they can be eaten, and it takes time and a lot of practice to learn how to do that. So until they do learn, father and mother must keep on the job feeding them or they will starve to death. And when there are ten of them all crying for fish, father and mother must be on the job from daylight to dark. Think it over, Peter. Think it over," said Rattles.

He suddenly left his perch, shot down, plunged into the water with a splash, was out again in a jiffy and in his bill was a Minnow. He flew back to his perch, swallowed his late dinner head first, then rattled away toward the Big River.

Contract Bridge

AFTER PASSING

It goes without saying that after a player has passed originally, he can bid somewhat more strongly than if this were his first turn. It does not follow, however, that he should urge a contract which his supporting values still do not justify. Observe this case:

North dealer.
North-South vulnerable.

♠ K 10 7
♥ K
♦ Q 9 7 5 2
♣ A J 6 2

♠ J 8 4 3 2
♥ 9 6 5
♦ 4 2
♣ Q 8 4

♥ J 8 4 3
♦ K J 8 6
♣ K 10 7 5

♠ A Q 6 5
♥ A Q 10 7 2
♦ A 10
♣ 9 3

The bidding.

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 ♣	Pass
4 ♥	Pass	4 N T	Pass
5 ♦	Double	6 ♠	Double
Pass	Pass	Pass

Beyond question, South was rather aggressive, especially considering that his partner had passed originally. Nevertheless, North was in large measure responsible for the bad slam contract. It was quite true that he had a great many honors, and that he could almost have opened the bidding, but this fact did not give him the license to jump from one to three spades, holding only the K-10-7 in support. A jump raise, whether or not the responder has previously passed should almost invariably guarantee at least four-card support. (In rare circumstances, very strong three-card support suffices, as a "least-of-evils" bid.). It would have been far better tactics if North had jumped in diamonds, to indicate that he had passed a hand just a shade under opening-bid requirements, and had he adopted this course, South scarcely would have become so slam-minded. It was apparent solidifying of his spades which made optimistic.

Even if the spades had broken more normally, South would have had a virtually hopeless task to perform. A club lead, for example, would have left him with no chance; and even after the diamond lead he was "not happy." In fact, he had to play very carefully, and abandon the chance to make the contract, in order to go down only one trick.
