LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Mail Arrangement From Souris to North Lake.

By Sir Walter Scott.
CHAPTER XXIV.

Thus tutored, Niel Ronaldson was introduced into the presence of Mertoun, but was utterly confounded to find that he could not act upon the system of deception which had been projected.—When he attempted, by some exaggeration of distance and peril, to enhance the hire of the boats and of the men, (for the search was to be by sea and land,) he found himself at once cut short by Mertoun, who showed not only the most perfect knowledge of the country, but of distances, tides, currents, and all belonging to the navigation of those seas, although these were topics with which he had hitherto appeared to be totally unacquainted. The Ranzelman, therefore, trembled when they came to speak of the recompense to be afforded for their exertions in the search; for it was not more unlikely that Mertoun should be as well informed of what was just and proper upon this head as upon others; and Niel remembered the storm of his fury, when, at an early period after he had settled in Jarishof, he drove Swertha and Sweyn Erikson from his presence. As, however, he stood hesitating betwixt the opposite fears of asking too much or too little, Mertoun stopped his mouth, and ended his uncertainty, by promising him a recompense beyond what he dared have ventured to ask, with an additional gratuity, in case they returned with the pleasing intelligence that his son was safe.

When this point was settled, Niel Ronaldson, like a man of conscience, began to consider earnestly the various places where search should be made after the young man; and having undertaken faithfully that the inquiry should be prosecuted at all the houses of the gentry, both in this and the neighboring islands, he added, that, "after all, if his honor would not be angry, there was one not far off, that, if any body dared speak her a question, and if she liked to answer it, could tell more about Maister Mordaunt than any body else could.—Ye will ken who I mean, Swertha? Her that was down at the haven this morning." Thus he concluded, addressing himself with a mysterious look to the housekeeper, which she answered with a nod and a wink.

"How mean you?" said Mertoun; speak out, short and open—who do you speak of?"
"It is Norma of the Fish-head," said Swertha, "that the Ranzelman is thinking about; for she has gone up to Saint Rinkan's Kirk this morning on business of her own."
"And what can this person know of my son?" said Mertoun; "she is, I believe, a wandering mad woman, or impostor."
"If she wanders," said Swertha, "it is for me lack of means at home, and that is weel forby that the Fowd himself would let her want naething."
"But what is that to my son?" said Mertoun impatiently.

"I dinna ken—she took unco pleasure in Maister Mordaunt from the time she first saw him, and mony a braw thing she gave him that as time or another, forby the gowd chain that hangs about his bonny Craig—folks say it is of fairy gold—I kenna what gold it is, but Bryce Snailfoot says that the value will amount to an hundred pounds English, and that is nae deaf nut."
"Go, Ronaldson," said Mertoun, "or else send some one, to seek this woman out—if you think there be a chance of her knowing anything of my son."
"She kens a' thing that happens in the islands," said Niel Ronaldson, "muckle sooner than other folk, and that is Heaven's truth. But as to going to the kirk or the kirkyard to speak after her, there is not a man in Zetland will do it, for meed or for money—and that's Heaven's truth as weel as the other."
"Cowardly, superstitious fools!" said Mertoun. But give me my cloak, Swertha. This woman has been at Burgh-Westra—she is related to Troil's family—she may know something of Mordaunt's absence and its cause. I will seek her myself. She is at the Cross-kirk, you say?"

Mertoun made no answer, but throwing his cloak loosely around him, (for the day was misty, with passing showers,) and leaving the decayed mansion of Jarishof, he walked at a pace much faster than was usual with him, taking the direction of the ruinous church, which stood, as he well knew, within three or four miles of his dwelling.

The Ranzelman and Swertha stood gazing after him in silence, until he was fairly out of ear-shot, and then, looking seriously on each other, and shaking their sagacious heads in utterer their remarks in the same breath.
"Fools are aye fleet and fain," said Swertha.
"Fey folk run fast," added the Ranzelman; "and the thing that we are born to, we cannot win by. I have known them that tried to stop folk that were fey. You have heard of Helen Emberson of Camsey, how she stopped all the holes and windows about the house, that her gudeman might not see day-light, and rise to the haaf-fishing, because she feared foul weather; and how the boat he should have sailed in was lost in the Roost; and how she came back rejoicing in her gudeman's safety—but ne'er may care, for there she found him drowned in his own masking-fat, within the wa's of his ain biggin; and moreover—"

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain; and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and take no other kind.

Sir,—Not long ago a deliberate attempt made by the mail courier on the above route to change the time of leaving Souris to suit his own pleasure, irrespective of the conditions of his contract. But the public found redress by exposing his actions in the press. Since, then, however, this autocratic personage has again assumed his wonted authorities. Instead of a tri-weekly mail as usual, we are now subjected to a bi-weekly one. He also appoints his own day, which must be in accordance with his nag's constitution. How to account for this second violation of the public right is an enigma which I am unable to solve, as the roads and weather were everything that could be desired during the last fortnight. Notwithstanding which, instead of six mails, we received but four. The people, therefore, characterize such treatment as a high-handed piece of imposition, and unwarranted interference with their just rights and liberties. Rumor has it that it is wilful negligence on the courier's part, in order to get a pretext for throwing up the contract. But why does he not submit his resignation to the proper authorities who would, no doubt, relieve him of a position for which he was never intended by nature? The people will hail, with general rejoicings, the removal of such a paragon under any circumstances; in order that some one possessing more physical ability and a more obliging disposition may succeed him.

Is it leniency on the part of the authorities that permits such injustice being practiced on an intelligent public with impunity? Perhaps the Postmaster at Souris can explain.

In conclusion, I feel confident that I am expressing the sentiments of an unbiased public, when I state that the retention in office of such an incapable after this date, would be a direct insult to their intelligence.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for your valuable space, I remain, yours respectfully,
NEW YEAR.
North Lake, Jan. 1st, 1888.

Address,
Mr. N. W. Leard:
DEAR TEACHER.—We cannot allow this festive season to pass without giving you some evidence that your faithful labors are prized by the scholars of this school.

You have ever had our best interests at heart, as has been shown by the pains you have taken to instruct us in the several branches of our studies.

Your work indeed, is one that requires patience and perseverance, and we hope that by your kind instruction in the future we may make better progress, and that you may feel rewarded to find that your labor has not been lost.

You will please accept this writing desk as a token of our appreciation of your faithfulness as teacher in this school.

We all join in wishing you a joyous Christmas and a happy and prosperous New Year.

Port Hill, Dec. 23rd, 1887.

REPLY.
DEAR PUPILS.—Your complimentary address and valuable present was an extreme surprise to me. It is very gratifying, indeed, to a teacher, whose occupation is so irksome, to be assured that his labors are so much appreciated. I receive the writing desk, not for its real value, but for the generous spirit in which it was given.

True, I have ever had you best interests at heart, my chief object being to advance you in your studies, with a thorough understanding as you advance. Yet your progress is not due to my own labors alone, but to your own industry and perseverance.

During my stay of four years and six months among you, you have become very much endeared to me by your kind department and diligence in your studies.

After our holidays are over, I trust we will be able to resume our work with greater determination to persevere. In return I wish you the compliments of the season.

N. W. LEARD.

Salt for Cattle.
Every farmer is accustomed to salt his cattle, but not every one knows why he does it, unless it is because the stock like it. But a moment's thought will show where the advantage lies. As soon as food enters the stomach, says The Rural Canadian, the natural tendency is at once for fermentation to begin, and there arises a contest between this tendency and the digestive powers. And if these powers are vigorous and the process of fermentation is checked or intercepted, then no bad results will follow, the food will be digested, and the salt will not be needed, though at any time this will assist in the process of digestion. Salt keeps food from decaying until it can be digested and assimilated and prolongs the time to allow the digestive organs to complete their work, as if food is taken in excess, as often happens when stock is in pasture, salt given frequently will be of much advantage. And further, salt is preventive of worms. When fermentation sets in, the conditions presented are favorable to the existence of worms in the intestinal canal, and may possibly be endangered by the process. Consequently it should be a rule with stockmen to keep salt before the cattle or within reach when they need it, and cattle will obey the demands of nature and supply the wants as needed.

FROM Frank J. Pierce, Periodical Depot, Augusta, Me.: "I am pleased to say that two bottles of your Adamson's Cough Balsam has entirely cured me of a cough of nearly a year's standing. I have tried many mixtures during that time without success." Trial bottles 10 cents.
