MAJ. GWYNNE'S SISTER.

"It is quite useless waiting for me, Fred. It will take at least an hour to overhaul my machine and adjust these confounded bearings. You'd better run on to St. Albans and order a rattling good dinner for two at the George. By the time it's ready, I shall be with you again."
"It will be better than hanging about here when I can do no good," I agreed. "It was a nasty spill, and you may think yourself lucky to have got off with nothing worse than a few bruises and a little delay. 'Pop my wheel.' I was afraid our tour was already at an end. Trust to me, Harry, old fellow, to have all ready for the inner man."
"Yes, I'll trust you for that," replied my cyclist chum, Harry Holmes, as I gripped the handle-bar of my machine and vaulted into the saddle.
"And not having taken to your editing remarks concerning my appearance, I shan't, perhaps, be so long repairing damages as you think."
With this friendly piece of parting banter I pressed the pedals in earnest, and the next moment was speeding along the high road to St. Albans, leaving behind me the distance, when rounding a curve in the road I observed a lady cyclist a short distance ahead. Apparently something had gone wrong with her mount, for she was standing with it propped up by the side of the road, and was viewing surrounding objects with an air of evident distress.

True to the spirit which prompts every cyclist to help another in distress, I slackened speed and, as I drew near, noticed that the lady was both young and pretty—a discovery which at once made my impressionable heart hope that she might be glad to avail herself of my services in some way or other.
My wishes in this respect were speedily gratified, for as I dismounted and politely inquired if anything had gone wrong with her machine, the young lady's face became suffused with the most winning of smiles.
"Oh, thank you, so very much, sir," was the response, spoken without the slightest trace of feigning. "I must confess that I'm in a wretched fix. The handle-bar of my machine has become loose, and I haven't a tool of any description that will tighten up the nut.
And to make matters worse, my brother, Maj. Gwynne, has lost me, or, I suppose, I have lost him; and I'm afraid he hasn't the least idea that my plight is such a bad one."
"Oh, I'm very soon set things right," I said, reassuringly, and the look of gratitude bestowed upon me made me think that I had never before met with so charming or so handsome a girl as this Miss Gwynne.
Whipping out my spanner, I adjusted it, and proceeded to tighten up the slightest trace of friction. I advised that the young lady's machine was anything but a good one. In fact, I was quietly telling myself what an inferior and old-fashioned mount it was for so wise and apparently well-to-do a rider, when, to my dismay, the screw broke short off, and the nut attached to it rolled in the road.

"Now, here's a pretty go!" I burst out, reddening with mingled confusion and vexation. "Whatever shall we do now, Miss Gwynne?"
"Oh, I'm sure I don't know," was the reply, uttered in tones of consternation, which almost overwhelmed me, and made me call myself everything but a competent auxiliary. And that it must be at least twenty miles from home, too; and my brother, I am quite certain, never trouble himself to turn back to look for me. He'll simply keep on driving ahead. But, there, I suppose he is just like other brothers—quite useless as escorts."
"Well, I've landed you in this scrape, and you must allow me to see you out of it, that's all."

Secretly, I began to feel rather glad, as I perceived what a pleasant duty had suddenly devolved upon me, and for the time, at all events, my chum Holmes was quite forgotten.
"But what can either of us do?" You can't pick me up and give me a ride. Yours isn't a bicycle built for two, you know," and the young lady laughed with some perfect good humor that I felt quite at my ease again.

"I sincerely wish it was for once," I returned, boldly, and then, as she turned a pair of bright, laughing eyes upon me, I blushed at my unwarranted temerity, while I was growing positively eager to become the slave of this fair cyclist.
"I can only suggest," I added, "that as you are so far from home, you will allow me to see you to some hotel while I try to get a new bolt and nut.
Possibly you can tell me of a likely place to put at for an hour or two, and I am a stranger about here, so I can easily manage to wheel your machine and my own along."

There's one great objection to such a thing," she said, after a pause.
"The fact is, Dick—I mean my brother, Maj. Gwynne, has left me without a penny in my pocket." She coloured up charmingly at the confession, and went on: "Of course, he doesn't know that, and it's my own fault. I often go out without bringing my purse, but I declare I never will again." She gave a little laugh, as if to conceal her vexation, and added: "And so I can't accept your kind suggestion."
"On the contrary," I returned, more eagerly still, "it is the greater unlucky I should not desert you, especially as your predicament is entirely due to my carelessness. You don't know how sorry I am at having rendered your machine useless, and under the circumstances, I feel in honour bound to repair the mischief; and if you will afford me the happiness of seeing you made comfortable, I can, no doubt, very soon get your mount put right."
"Oh, but if I allow you to spend anything upon me it must only be as a loan. No, please don't interrupt; that must be distinctly understood. My brother must, and will, be only too happy to settle with you. Besides," she girl continued, with a smile, "whatever would he say to me if I allowed a perfect stranger to spend money upon me?"
"He'd say it served me right for my carelessness. But you will allow me, then, to see you made comfortable somewhere while I try to repair damages?"

"Really, I don't see what else I can do, under the circumstances," was the answer, with a little sigh, as if of regret. "Then, with a light laugh and a mock-moaning tone, she added:
"Oh, but won't I make it warm for brother Dick when he meets you? A good deal, I think. You see, he hasn't even troubled to run back to find out whether I've broken my neck or not—and, between you and me, he hates the idea of me being hurt. But let us be having, Mr.—"
A little hesitation, some apparent embarrassment, one half-sly glance at me, and my heart was no longer my own. I knew I was, even already, muddy in love with pretty Miss Gwynne.
"Fred Brandon—quite at your service."
"Well, Mr. Brandon, there's a turning half a mile down the road which will take us to just the place we want.
Then you will be able to run on to St.
Albans to get what you need for my machine. There's no place nearer, and I'm afraid you will be very glad when you have done with us. My brother troublesome companion as I am proving."
"On the contrary, quite a pleasant interruption to my journey," I gallantly ventured, and I really thought that Miss Gwynne was the most charming and unconventional girl I had ever met. In fact, we presently reached the place she had spoken of, all too soon to suit my newly-awakened emotions.
I found, on inquiry, that I could reach St. Albans quicker by taking some short cuts across the fields than by riding round the road, and I determined to leave my machine at the inn. As for poor Harry, I was by this time utterly oblivious of his existence.
Looking in upon Miss Gwynne before leaving the house, I found her already enjoying an appetizing repast—a sight which momentarily gave me some quaint notions of conscience concerning myself, but which I promptly brushed ready for him by the time he reached the George.

"Pardon me, Miss Gwynne," said I, "I haven't had a chance to settle with the landlord yet, and he may look for payment before my return. Except for a few coppers, this note, as it happens, is the smallest amount I have about me, so pray accept it as the loan which you say you will insist upon on your brother, Maj. Gwynne returning."
I delicately placed a five note upon the table, and then, blushing furiously at the rather curious look accorded me—which I recalled soon afterward—I hastened from the room.
Having secured what I wanted in St. Albans, I was back well under the lock of hours. Miss Gwynne, however, I could see no trace—
"Oh, the lady went soon after you left, sir," said the landlord, in answer to my interrogations. "She said you'd know which way she'd gone, and she wouldn't let her brother's bicycle be you'd arranged to come back for hers and to settle up with me."
"What!" I fairly gasped, "gone off on my machine—said I was her brother?—and left me to settle up?
Why, what on earth are you raving about now?"
"Ain't raving at all," snapped the landlord, evading me indignantly. "But —I hope it's all right, she—"
"Hope it's all right," I interrupted, fervently. "It's all wrong, if she said I was her brother—and gone off with my almost new 29-gauge mount, and my five note, too! Oh, yes, it is all right for her, no doubt, and a very clever swindler that girl must be. That machine she's left behind isn't worth the price of old iron. And you let her slip away under your very nose!" I could hardly express a groan as I saw how neatly I had been deceived, for I felt very hard hit both in pocket and vanity—especially the latter.

"Well, it's your own fault, sir," the landlord retorted, gruffly. "If you let the girl soap you down like she seems to have done, you've got no one but yourself to blame. And it's my belief that she ain't a girl at all, but a chap dressed up as such, so as to swindle guests easier. I had my doubts when she left, but now I'm sure."
"Ten to one you've been done up by a young fellow called Dan Ford, a clever bicycle-thief, much wanted by the police in these parts. He's better known as Dolly Ford, because he makes such a good-looking girl when he dresses up. You ain't the first guest as he's swindled in just this same way.
I dare say he's no roamer got out of sight of this place than he assumed his true character, and by this time your bicycle has put him miles out of reach, and maybe it's already sold." To learn that I had been igno-rantly duped by a common bicycle-thief mad-ded me still more; but the only consolation I had was in wishing all sorts of dreadful things toward the pseudo Maj. Gwynne's sister.

MARK IT WELL.
A Development Peculiar to the Present Generation Dangerous and Often Fatal.
As each generation comes and goes it is marked by changes, developments and discoveries unknown to its predecessors. From a physical standpoint one of the most to be dreaded conditions and peculiar to its rapid increase during the present generation, is when the mind labors under the delusion of persecution, continual restlessness, pain in the back and head, twitching of the muscles of the face and hands, furred tongue, breath foul and heavy, nausea and further indications of stomach trouble. There may be delirium, convulsions or sinking spells.
Medical authorities apply different names to the conditions that are unintelligible to the average reader. The actual fact is the demoralized and dangerous state of the system is due to the accumulation of "Body Poison" in the blood that should and would be thrown off by the kidneys if in a healthy condition. In order to restore health, strike at the root of the disease with Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, the only medicine known that will control the changes going on in the kidneys, enabling them to furnish for the whole system blood free from disease-producing poison, building up the shattered condition of nerves, and relieving mental depression.

confidence of the public.
IT IS THE PEOPLE'S INSURANCE, and is sold at about half the rates charged by old system companies. During the first three months of 1895 it was thoroughly examined by the Insurance Depart-and South Dakota, and pronounced to be sound to the core.

PRIVATELY DISCUSSED.
Montreal Physicians beginning largely to prescribe a New Remedy.
MONTREAL, July 15.—There is still a good deal of talk here among all classes over the recent despatches which appeared in so many Canadian papers, relative to the cure of Mr. G. H. Keat, of Ottawa, from Bright's disease. Although the merits of the case have not been openly discussed at any of the meetings of the medical society, there has been a good deal of private conference and the impression which the report of the recovery has made is evidenced in the fact that a good many physicians have prescribed Dodd's Kidney Pills in their private practice. No higher testimony than this could be given to any remedy, the reluctance of medical men to admit any good in proprietary medicines being well known.

Fatal Result of Delay.
