Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—I beg to subjoin an attempt in verse for your approval. One thing I can answer for, the descriptions are REAL. The Saxon or German root of the modern English word, "Lady" was, I believe, "Laef Daeg," Giver of Bread. "The words of King Lemuel," "the prophecy that his mother taught him" are to be found, as I need not say, in Proverbs, chapter 31. Who was she? Je ne scais pas. I think I might venture to say who she was not; but I will not say it, and dare not. I am, Sir, your constant reader,

THE VILLAGE FESTIVAL.

BY VICH DHOMNUIL NAN ORD.

I love thee, England, country of my birth!
Land of true Freedom! Paradise of Earth!
I love thy brave sky kindly sons of toil.
The stay and bulwark of their native soil:
Ready to aid a friend, repel a foe,
Reward a kindness, or resist a blow.
On working days, in every field we see
A forethought worthy of the Ant or Bee;
But when some rural fete has banished care,
Our Halls and Hamlets wear a garb more fair:

When flaunting Banners through the Village borne,
Are heralded by Trumpet, Fife and Horn;
When jocund shouts are heard in every breeze,
And answering Onkeos echo from the Trees.

With head erect, and glance of proud command,
The Village Maestro leads his little Band;
Blows the loud clarinet with might and main,
Then smiles and nods, and puffs and blows again.

The minor minstrels, of inferior skill,
With grave attention mark their Leader's will;
Play flat or sharp, as he directs the tune,
On Flute and Viol, Trumpet and Bassoon.
They first begin old England's well known strains,
"Long live the King!" responds each loyal swain.

Then brisker airs in lively measure beat;
"The College Hornpipe fires their hearts and feet."

"The Soldier's Joy" their kindling spirit warms;
Then "Rule Britannia!" famed in arts and arms,
"Neath yonder Tent, with fragrant Lilac dress,
And glowing with Laburnum's brilliant vest,
Are heard by turns, the merry laugh and tale,
As lads and lassies quaff the home-brewed ale.

Beneath its shade, or strolling o'er the green,
The smiling Vicar and the Squire are seen;
Their lovely partners grace each manly arm
And round their steps their happy children swarm.

Ye Landed gentlemen! Your country's trust,
Respect yourselves! Respect your Fathers' dust!
A scene like this they never failed to grace;
They never dreamed of Cockford's—nor the Race.

In ancient Halls your sires received their rent,
And 'mid their tenants, all their income spent;
Of Britain's strength the sinew and the bone,
Friends of the poor, and bulwarks of the Throne.

The eldest son his dying sire succeeds,
Renews his youth, and emulates his deeds;
Preserves with care the old ancestral walls,
And fills the Rank to which his Birthright calls.

The best of rules by Satan may be curst;
Sometimes the oldest son has been the worst;
But this great Truth was taught to me at school,

Exceptions only tend to prove the Rule!
The younger sons go forth, their fate to try!
To earn new honors for their lineage high;
Teach men to live,—and soldiers how to die!
With joy the Church her highborn sons may view.

And half the Peerage charged at Waterloo.
The gentler sex an equal merit claim;
The Ladies well deserved their Saxon name:
King Lemuel's mother, from the Sacred Book
Her's were the priceless counsels which they took;

The mothers these, to whom our sires gave heed,
And to their husbands they were crowns indeed!

O! cease, my Lords, your country homes to spurn!
Let happier days and better thoughts return!
Resume your station! Head your social trains!
Leave smoky London for your native plains!

To Agriculture's lore your thoughts devote!
Each homely joy, each rural sport, promote!
Let landscape gardening charm your leisure hours,
And make your home a paradise of flowers!

Let England's breeze, old England's banner blow!
Down with each foreign, each domestic foe!
Let harmless merriment around you dwell,
And cry in English "Vive La Bagatelle!"

POSTSCRIPT:
Stern Wolf of Badesoch! Behold thy son
By love of Primogeniture undone!

O! Donald of Invermahyle! say sire!
I understand thee now, thy rage and ire.
O! that again, in battles wild thy roar,
Were seen the flashing of thy bright Claymore!

Another sire I have,—the Cid Campeador,
The Pride of Spain, the terror of the Moor.

"I'm Rodrigo of Bivar!
A Castilian good and true!"
