IRIPLEY'S BELIEVE IT OR NOT

THE SWARKESTONE BRIDGE over the Trent River, England WAS BUILT IN 1797 BY TWO SISTERS WHOSE SWEETHEARTS HAD DROWNED ATTEMPTING TO FORD THE RIVER

CONTRACT BRIDGE

By B. JAY BECKER

Such incidents sometimes give rise to the suspicion that perhaps West didn't hold his cards close enough to his chest. But while we grant South was lucky to find West with the unguarded king, we are nevertheless prepared to argue South's play was not just luck.

Opening lead—eight of diamonds. The inferences a declarer can draw, and the conclusions he can reach, sometimes border on the miraculous. As evidence we cite this hand taken from a rubber bridge game.

South won the diamond lead in dummy and ruffed a diamond with the eight. After drawing three rounds of trumps, he ruffed dummy's last diamond, learning in the process that East had started with a seven-card suit.

Declarer then led a club. East won and returned a club. After disposing of two spades on dummy's clubs, declarer led the jack of spades from dummy. When East followed low, South played the ace, speared West's king, and made the slam.

West was marked to have the lone king of spades. For practical purposes, it could not have been otherwise. The bidding, in conjunction with the play, was highly illuminating.

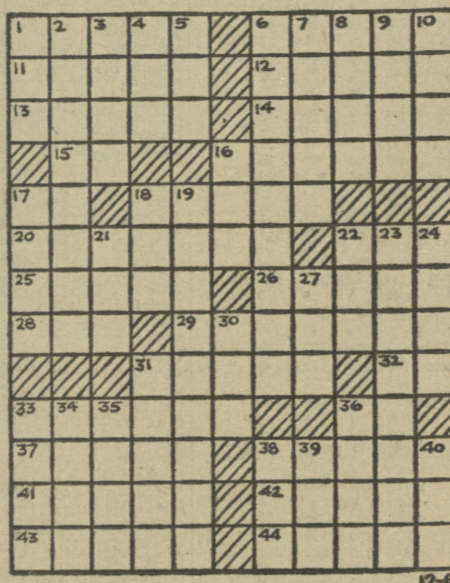

East had shown up during the play with exactly seven diamonds no hearts, and two clubs. Hence, he must have been dealt exactly four spades.

And since East had four spades West had to have precisely one. But East could not very well have the king among his spades. If his hand consisted of spade Kxxx, hearts blank, diamonds KQJ10942, club A5 he would presumably have opened the bidding with one diamond, not four.

It followed, therefore, that West's singleton spade was the king. So, when South played the ace, West was forced to produce the last fitting piece of the jigsaw puzzle—the king of spades.
