"EAGLE AND HAWK" AN EXCITING ACTION HIT

When bigger and better action pictures are made, they'll all be compared to Paramount's blazing Technicolor drama "The Eagle and the Hawk" which opened yesterday at the Capitol Theatre to the muted accompaniment of tingling spines. This John Payne-Rhonda Fleming-Dennis O'Keefe starrer, tautly directed by Lewis R. Foster, packs fore excitement into a single reel than most pictures can lay claim to in their entirety. In addition, there's one breathtaking sequence in particular, where Payne is spread-eagled between two wild horses, that is certainly one of most spectacular scenes ever filmed.

A thrilling account of a desperate mission to Mexico by two American undercover agents ordered to investigate an invasion plot, "The Eagle and the Hawk" is based on a stirring chapter in our country's turbulent history. Payne and O'Keefe are the daring spy team, while Miss Fleming is seen as a beautiful woman caught up in the web of international intrigue. The three stars, along with the featured players, keep the action lively and interesting throughout. There's not one dull moment as the amazing story of an attempt to invade Texas is unfolded.
