The bidding:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	4 ♠

Opening lead—queen of diamonds.

South's strategy in suppressing any mention of the diamonds during the bidding is in the most approved style. A game contract in spades was clearly in order after North's raise, and there could be no practical advantage in disclosing the strong secondary suit.

South won the diamond lead with the ace, drew three rounds of trump, and led the king of diamonds, on which East discarded the jack of clubs. Another diamond put West in the lead. He played the queen of clubs and ultimately declarer went down one, losing two diamonds and two clubs.

South had a better line of play available which would have made the hand. He did not make proper allowance for the possibility the adverse diamonds might break 4-1. South should have proceeded on the basis that the diamonds would break badly because otherwise there was no real danger of defeat.

The proper play, after winning the opening lead, is to lead a trump to the king and play a diamond from dummy. East will have to choose whether or not to trump the diamond. Whichever course he elects, the contract is made.

Suppose, first, East ruffs the diamond. Declarer, of course, plays low. The presumable heart return is won in dummy, another round of trumps is taken, and this is followed by the king and another diamond. The ruff in dummy establishes the last diamond and declarer ends losing one diamond and two clubs.

Or suppose East does not trump the diamond when it is led from dummy. South wins the king and returns a third diamond. West wins and attacks the club king. Declarer cannot be prevented from ruffing a fourth diamond in dummy, drawing trumps and making the same ten tricks.

The course of play suggested makes the hand if it can be made. It covers both the 3-2 break and the 4-1 break that actually existed. It gives East a choice of defensive plays, neither of which can injure the declarer. It gives South the maximum chance for success.

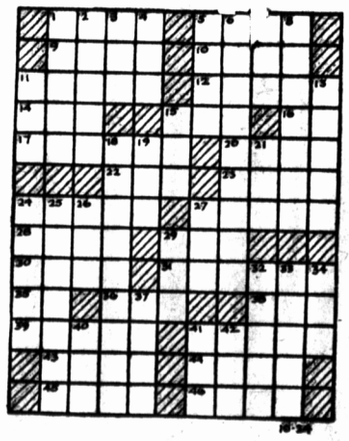
Yesterday's Answer



DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:
A X Y D L B A A X R
L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this example A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

A Cryptogram Quotation

A X H A X D S J Z D U J Y Y N D X H R
A X D S J Z D K B T Z N K — D K L S Z N K.

Yesterday's Cryptoquote: HISTORY ABHORS DETERMINISM BUT CANNOT TOLERATE CHANCE—DE VOTO.

BEDTIME STORIES

Buster Interferes

It often keeps a temper sweet,
To always have enough to eat.
—Old Mother Nature.

Reddy Fox was an uninvited guest at the nutting party over in the Green Forest. None of the others at the party knew he was there. No one was thinking of him. The only thing anyone was thinking of was getting enough of the sweet three-sided little beech nuts that Jack Frost and rough Brother North Wind together had shaken down from the beech trees. It was quite a party. Lightfoot the Deer was there and so was Buster Bear. They were the biggest. Bobby Coon was next in size. Then there were Thunderer the Grouse and Mrs. Grouse and three of their grown children. All of these were filling their crops as fast as they could pick up the little nuts. Three squirrel cousins were carrying away nuts and hiding them for winter use as fast as they could pick them up. Everybody was very, very busy and no one was trying to make trouble for anyone else. There were nuts enough for all and there was no quarreling.

Reddy Fox had managed to get near enough to watch all that was going on and do it without being seen by anyone. He wanted one of those Grouse for dinner. He had come over there hoping to catch a Squirrel, but then he saw the Grouse. He had to be very, very careful in order not to be seen. He wasn't afraid of being heard should he rustle a few leaves, because there was a great deal of leaf rustling. They were being pulled over in search of the little nuts hidden under them.

Reddy would lie for a long time without moving so much as a hair, then when a chance offered he would creep a little nearer. Finally he was as near the party as he could get without being discovered. He would have to be patient now and wait for one of those Grouse to come near enough to be caught.

Buster was interfering with Reddy's plans and didn't know it.

One of the young Grouse began to come in Reddy's direction. He was picking up nuts, now here, now there, but all the time time slowly moving toward Reddy. He was almost near enough when he stopped, turned and began to move away. Reddy was tempted. He was tempted to make a sudden rush. That Grouse was wholly unsuspecting. He wasn't watching for danger at all.

"Shall I try it? Or shall I wait and see if he won't come back this way, or one of the other come over here?" thought Reddy. He decided to wait. If he should make the rush and fail to catch that Grouse, there wouldn't be another chance. As long as no one knew he was there, there would always be a chance. So Reddy waited.

He didn't have long to wait before someone came directly toward him. It wasn't one of those Grouse. It wasn't one of those Squirrels. It wasn't anyone that Reddy wanted to have anything to do with. It was great big Buster Bear. Buster began to hunt for nuts between Reddy and the nearest Grouse. There wasn't a chance for a rush. That Grouse had turned back again. He didn't seem the least bit afraid of Buster Bear. He came nearer and nearer until had Buster not been in the way Reddy would have had a very good chance of getting that dinner he was hoping for. But Buster was in the way. Reddy simply didn't dare go as close to Buster as he would have to do to catch that Grouse. Buster was interfering with Reddy's plans and didn't know it. It would have made no difference if he had known it.

FIRE ON CROWD

KRUGERDORP, South Africa (Reuters)—Several persons were injured Saturday when police opened fire on a crowded dance hall in this Transvaal settlement for persons of mixed blood. Police were forced to fire when the crowd began to stone them.
