A Goddess of Africa
 A Story of the Golden Fleece.
 BY ST. GEORGE RATHBORNE
 Author of "MISS CAPRICE," "DR. JACK'S WIFE," "DR. JACK," ETC., ETC.

Although through a freak of fortune the smile of prosperity seemed to once more hover above their heads, the future was uncertain, and might contain much that was disastrous for them.

This brilliant illumination promised to do them one service at least, since by its aid they could make better time, avoiding such obstacles as tripped Rex more than once during their recent race.

There was something fascinating about the burning village, and Hastings several times sent a quick glance over his shoulder as he ran.

So Lot's wife, consumed by curiosity, had in days of yore been unable to resist the temptation to gaze back upon the city given over to destruction, and suffered in consequence—and when Rex landed in a heap among some vines and bushes he concluded it would be good policy to look ahead.

In so doing he learned that their flight was not destined to be accomplished without new dangers; for just in front of them he discovered the figure of a tall Zambodi warrior, whose attitude was exceedingly warlike.

Hastings was in a fighting humor—he experienced the thrill of a veteran in the midst of battle—the shouts and clamor attending the burning kraal, together with his flight and the furious encounter at the cabin all seemed to stir him to a fever heat.

Accordingly, when he discovered this lone figure so resolutely blocking their path and inviting him to single combat, he made directly for him, feeling that the encounter being inevitable, the sooner it was over the better.

It chanced that the spot where they came together was open and free from trees, a little glade as it were, just suited to a desperate duel.

Rex handled his assegai with considerable adroitness, but the other parried each thrust and it began to look as though the delay might prove fatal to their chances of escape.

Although he had hated to use his revolver for many reasons, it began to look as though such a thing would become necessary, and he was even fumbling about among the numerous dangling cat-tails with the intention of dragging the six-shooter into the argument, when by a mere accident the wooden pole of his assegai struck the black knuckles of the savage whom he had marked for an early and swift transit to the happy hunting grounds of the Zambodi.

The effect was simply electrical, for the toughest sort of a trooper ejaculation burst from the lips of the black duelist, almost petrifying Rex, who burst out with:

"Jim, Jim Bludsoe, is it you?"

And the wild looking savage with whom he had been fencing so desperately in the attempt to have his life staggered back and dropped his own weapon while he cried:

"The devil! It's Mr. Hastings, sure pop!"

At this a couple of figures ran forward, bursting through the sheltering bushes.

No need to tell Rex who they were, for the one in the lead was tall of form, with the figure an athlete might envy.

Another moment and he found the arms of the Englishman around him in spite of the paint and paraphernalia that went to make a full-fledged Zambodi warrior out of him, and enjoyed the felicity of a genuine bear hug; while Bludsoe danced around them endeavoring to imitate the eccentric gestures and hops of a warrior preparing to go upon the war-

LOST—In June, between Queen Street and Navigation Co's Wharf, a parcel of clothing. Finder will be suitably rewarded by leaving me at this office.

Looking backward occasionally they could see that the conflagration was growing gradually less in volume, as the lodges became more scattered.

The work had been accomplished, and when the shock of desolation passed away they could expect to have a desperate pursuit inaugurated.

Still on horseback they would be in a position to defy the most determined of foes, provided they avoided pitfalls and ambushes, for which these Zulu tribes are noted—a trap is their usual means of securing game, and in war they naturally apply the same tactics with a view to exterminating their foes.

The high spirits consequent upon the success of their plans, were not destined to hold out.

Rex saw that something was wrong when a halt was called, and Lord Bruno entered into an earnest discussion with Bludsoe.

The latter struck a match and dropped to the ground as if bent upon an examination.

Then he used some strong language.

"What's wrong?" asked Hastings, hurrying to where they stood.

"The hosses are gone!" replied the cowboy.

Here was a fearful calamity, and while Rex could not grasp its full scope as readily as the prairie rider, he realized that an exceedingly grave condition confronted them.

To be afoot in this African wilderness, with a whole tribe of enraged warriors hunting high and low for them was a state of affairs calculated to alarm the boldest.

It must needs be something beyond the ordinary that could make Jim Bludsoe frown and shake his head.

A closer examination was made. This only served to confirm the facts, however disagreeable they might appear.

Some cunning enemy had either seen them hide the animals or else by a mere accident had run across them.

At any rate the horses were gone, and it would be useless looking for them.

But for the presence of the young girl the air in that neighborhood would have been fairly sulphurous, such was the rage of Bludsoe and Red Eric.

The doctor being a philosopher, took things as they came, much as a disciple of the prophet Mohammed might have done; and Little Phil seldom made himself heard.

Lord Bruno shouldered the blame, declaring that it was pretty much his fault—Bludsoe had suggested leaving some one to guard the precious animals, but he had believed every arm would be needed at the kraal, in order to carry out their designs.

The mischief was done, the horses had been stolen, and now it remained to them to make a safe retreat.

Such emergencies bring out all there may be in a man.

Although Bludsoe was deeply mortified and inwardly furious at the trick played upon them, he speedily recovered himself and began to consider what was best to be done.

Under ordinary conditions it would have suited him exactly to hang about the neighborhood, remaining concealed from the blacks, until some good opportunity arose when their horses could be recovered.

Now the case was different—Lord Bruno desired to place as much distance between the destroyed kraal, with the vengeful Zambodi, and their own persons, as possible. Perhaps the presence of Marian had something to do with this. At any rate it was determined to make the move.

Bludsoe was fully aroused.

He knew full well they would be followed by a swarm of eager vengeance seekers, and to throw these trackers off the trail it was necessary that he bring to bear all the tricks learned in his wild life along the Texan border.

As they turned their backs upon the silent volcano which in the ages gone by had been such a factor in the landscape of that country, an outlet of the eternal fires, Lord Bruno managed to get Rex at his side, in order to question him concerning the girl.

Mania for Operations

Among the Doctors. No Need of the Knife to Cure Piles. A Surer, Cheaper Easier Way, Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Dread of the surgeon's knife causes multitudes of people to suffer on year after year with piles, when they could be cured without risk, expense, or danger of an operation by using Dr. Chase's Ointment, the only preparation guaranteed to cure any case of itching, bleeding, or protruding piles.

Rev. J. A. Baldwin, Baptist minister, Arkona, Ont., writes:—"For over twenty years I was a great sufferer from itching and protruding piles. I used many remedies and underwent three very painful surgical operations, all without obtaining any permanent benefit. When about to give up in despair I was told to use Dr. Chase's Ointment, and did so, finding relief at once. I used three boxes, and am almost entirely cured. The itching is all gone. I have advised others to use it, believing it would cure them as it has me."

Dr. Chase's Ointment is the only positive and actual cure for every form of piles, 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmondson, Bates and Co., Toronto.
