

1st Causeway Tenders Will Be Called Soon

Tenders for the first stage of the P.E.I. Causeway will likely be called two months ahead of schedule said J. Watson, MacNaught minister of mines, yesterday in Ottawa.

Prince Edward Island's representative in the cabinet told an interviewer Thursday he hopes tenders will be called in October, rather than in December as originally announced by Prime Minister Pearson.

This would move the initial step of the $148,000,000 project ahead of the Nov. 8 federal election.

Said Mr. MacNaught: "I hope we'll be able to call for tenders within the next six weeks."

The first tenders will be for construction of the New Brunswick land approaches to the nine-mile link.

The mines minister, who represented Prince in the last Parliament, is getting ready to wage his seventh federal election campaign. He was first elected in 1945, lost in 1959 and came back with a 580-vote margin in 1963.

MEET OTHER MINISTERS

Mr. MacNaught plans to leave for his home in Summerside next Thursday or Friday, but first he will attend the annual three-day conference of provincial mines ministers in Victoria, B.C.

Sunday, he is to represent the Canadian government at a special flag dedication ceremony at the convention of the War Amputations of Canada in Vancouver.

He will go to Victoria later Sunday for the mines conference, and is to make the closing address Wednesday.

The minister will also visit the offices of the Canadian Hydrographic Service, and the Dominion Astrophysical Observatory at Elk Lake, near Victoria, and the site of the new oceanographic institute at Colwood, B.C.

O'Leary Lions Urge Band Formation

O'LEARY — The formation of a 30-piece brass band was tentatively approved at the regular bi-monthly meeting of O'Leary Lions Club Thursday night.

President Keir Ramsay brought the meeting to order and gave a report of a special meeting with W. E. Rowdy Behavior Harming Soccer

By JIM CONWAY LONDON (CP)—The British reputation for fair play and good sportsmanship is threatened by a wave of rowdy behavior both on and off the football field.

Britons who once looked with disdain on fights between soccer players and riots among spectators on the Continent and in South America now see the same sort of thing happening here.

The first signs came last season after a number of incidents in which players were banished from games, including several in the English League first division.

Groups of supporters showed their anger by being destructive. Vandalism on excursion trains taking fans to out-of-town matches resulted in several towns being blacklisted by British Railways.

Even before the present season started Aug. 21, reports from non-league professional matches and overseas tournaments seemed to indicate things might get worse.

In a match between Arsenal and a Jamaican team in Kingston a fight broke out between the teams. The game had to be abandoned after 40 minutes when disgruntled spectators began throwing stones and bottles.

When Manchester United played in Hanover, West Germany, there were fights between British soldiers and local supporters.

Scottish fans who travelled to Sunderland, Durham, to see a match roamed the town looking for trouble. On the opening day of the Scottish season, which started a week before the English, several matches were disrupted by rowdy crowds and fights between police and spectators.

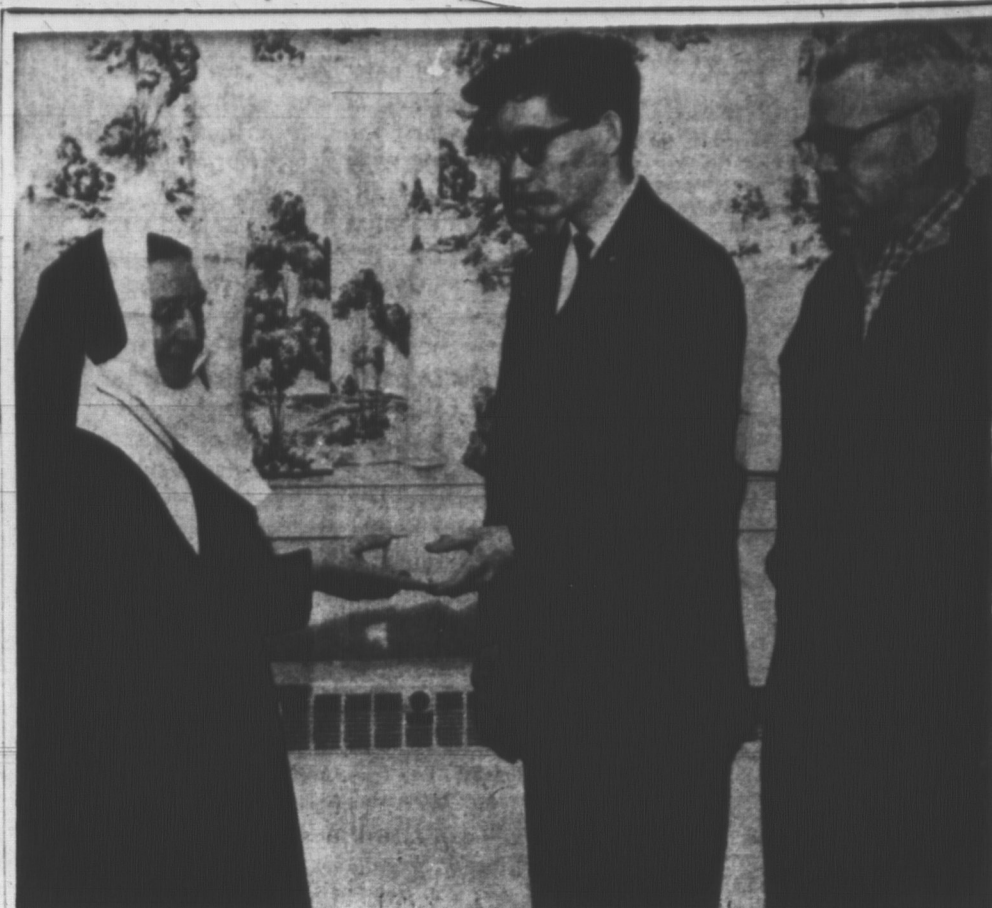

LEEDS ON SPOT Among those trying to do something about the situation is Manager Don Revie of Leeds United, which was narrowly beaten in the Football Association Cup final last May. Leeds players sometimes took the trainer's advice to "play it hard" a little too seriously last year. Now Revie wants to improve the team's image.

"Our players will have to be perfect gentlemen this season. Last season Leeds was unjustly labelled a dirty side."

The National Federation of Supporters' Clubs, the ruling body of the team fan clubs, has appointed football planner Sir Stanley Rous as "England's No. 1 Soccer Fan."

He is taking stock of the situation and will issue what is likely to be a strongly-worded report on football supporters' behavior in November.

Denis Follows, secretary of the Football Association, is especially concerned because the

Some Dates Are Announced For Nominating Conventions

Some executive meetings of the different political parties in the different counties were held last evening and it is now known when the nominating conventions will be held.

In Prince County the Progressive Conservatives will hold their convention Sept. 18 at the Civic Auditorium.

A meeting between the West Prince and East Prince Liberal association executives last evening resulted in them choosing Monday, Sept. 20, for their convention, also to be held at the Civic Auditorium.

The Liberal executive for Queen's County met in Charlottetown last evening and announced their nominating convention for Saturday, Sept. 18 at the Community Centre.

It is believed the Queen's PC's will be holding their convention Sept. 20, but it is not known where.

In King's County the Liberal Convention is to be held in Georgetown, Sept. 17, and the Progressive Conservatives are meeting in the Montague Regional High School auditorium Sept. 22.

The election machinery is now rolling and the returning officers are receiving their material and readying their kits for the enumerators.

Queen's County has one more poll than it did in the last election due to the splitting of the fast growing Brighton district.
