Let's Talk It Over

by "A"

It is to be fervently hoped that very soon something will be done about the deep holes at present in some of Summerside's asphalt streets. Two or three of them are so deep now that a car gets a real shaking up going over them. Sometimes, if there are no cars approaching, you can snake your way clear of the worst pitfalls, but there is one particularly vicious crater on Harvard Street, with cars habitually parked on either side, giving you no choice but to run the gauntlet. Every cloud has a silver lining, however, and Pollyanna, going over these obstructions on our Summerside streets, and on our main highways, would probably remark that this is indeed a land of opportunity — for garage mechanics!

The provincial Musical Festival for school pupils and adults is once more in full swing with a program more extensive than ever. The festival at its inception was comprised almost entirely of instrumental and vocal music, but in recent years choral reading and dancing in several forms have been getting more and more attention. We don't know who were responsible for initiating these festivals on Prince Edward Island, but they have certainly built "better than they knew."

The festivals are in full swing in the schools for children an abiding love for good music, and many grown-ups in the years to come, will rise up and call the originators blessed. It is difficult, not impossible, of course, but difficult — to teach an old dog new tricks, and youth is certainly the time to acquire a love for good music. The community concerts of the future will have no trouble selling to a people with a sound musical background. The audiences will be 100 per cent true music lovers, and the minority group who embrace such movements for what Professor Tuck of Mount Allison University calls their "snob value" will have practically disappeared.
