Opening lead — king of diamonds.
 It is one thing to learn how to execute an endplay as declarer, but it is quite another matter to master the art of avoiding an endplay as defender.

Here is a simple case where the defenders can cooperate to defeat declarer by evading an endplay which would otherwise prove fatal to the defense.

Let's first suppose that West cashes the A-K of diamonds and leads another diamond which the declarer ruffs. South enters dummy with a spade and leads the queen of hearts. When East plays low South decides his best chance is to play for an endplay instead of a trump finesse. He therefore takes the ace of hearts, cashes two more high spades, and throws West into the lead with a trump. West has no escape. He must either lead a club away from the king or else play a spade which permits declarer to discard a club from dummy as he ruffs in his own hand.

But now let's go back to West's position at trick two after the king of diamonds is led. East signaling with the queen. He is in position to anticipate that he is subject to a later endplay.

To avoid the danger he should lead the three of diamonds at trick two which East would win with the ten. It is no great feat for East to deduce that West has the ace of diamonds and that another diamond lead would be trumped by declarer.

It is therefore obvious to East that West's purpose in underleading the ace of diamonds could not have been for the purpose of having a third round of diamonds led, since West could have done this himself had he desired this line of defense.

Obviously, the purpose of West's low diamond lead was to have East return some other suit. West cannot want a spade led, in leads another diamond which the declarer ruffs. South enters dummy with a spade and leads the queen of hearts. When East plays low South decides his best chance is

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:
 AXYDLBAAXR IS LONGFELLOW

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

Pat and the underground agents drive away with the Captain in his car.
YOU'RE DOING FINE, CAPTAIN! YOU MAY LIVE TO TELL OF THIS IF WE REACH THE MOUNTAINS NEAR THE BOVAVIAN BORDER!
Meanwhile, from Bovavia, a helicopter takes off in the early morning... its mission to pick up Phil Corrigan...
At the same time planes leave air bases in Jorgorania to fly their routine dawn patrol along the border...

YOU THINK THE BANKER STOLE THE CASH, THEN HIRED A MAN TO BLOW THE SAFE SO IT WOULD LOOK LIKE AN OUTSIDE JOB?
I'M SURE THAT'S WHAT HAPPENED, MARSHAL.
I HOPE YOU'LL HELP ME TO PROVE IT.
WE'RE HERE, MARSHAL!
