The Baby.

What is the sweetest thing below
The overreaching heavenly bow,
The greatest nuisance that you know?
The baby.

Who has a precious little nose And chubby limbs and pinkish toes?
Who kicks and tumbles, laughs and crows?
The baby.

On whom does mother kisses press?
Who in the night screams in distress?
Who in the morning screams no less?
The baby.

Who never has a word to say, But always has his own sweet way?
May he'ven prolong his airy stay—
The baby.

THE WAR-TRAIL!

CHAPTER XXIV.

OLD COMRADES.

I FANCIED myself in a future world, battling with some fearful demon. No; those forms I see around me are of the earth. I still live!

My wounds pain me. Some one is binding them up. His hand is rude; but the tender expression of his eyes tells me that his heart is kind. Who is he?
Whence came he?

I am still upon the wide prairie; I see that clear enough. Where is my terrible antagonist? I remember our fierce fight—everything that occurred; but—I thought he had killed me!

I certainly was dead. But no; it cannot have been. I still live!

I see above me the blue sky, around me the green plain. Near me are forms—the forms of men, and yonder are horses!

Into whose hands have I fallen?
Whoever they be, they are friends; they must have rescued me from the gripe of the monster. But how? No one was in sight; how could they have arrived in time? I would ask, but have not strength to strength to speak to them!

The men are still bending over me. I observe one with large beard and brown bushy whiskers. There is another face, old and thin, and tanned to a copper color. My eyes wander from one to the other; some distant recollections stir within me. Those faces—Now I see them but dimly—I see them no longer—

I had fainted, and was again insensible.

Once more I became conscious, and this time felt stronger. I could better understand what was passing around me.
I observed that the sun was going down; but a buffalo robe, suspended by two upright saplings, guarded his rays from the spot where I lay. My serape was under me, and my head rested in my saddle, over which another robe had been laid. I lay upon my side, and the position gave me a commanding view of all that was passing. A fire was burning near, by which were two persons, one seated, the other standing; my eyes passed from one to the other, scanning each in turn.

The younger stood leaning on his rifle, looking into the fire. "He was the type of a 'mountain man'—a trapper. He was full six feet in his moccasins, and of a build that suggested the idea of strength and Saxon ancestry. His arms were like young oaks; and his hand grasping the muzzle of his gun appeared large, fleshless, and muscular. His cheek was broad and firm, and was partially covered with a bushy whisker, that met over the chin; while a beard of the same color—dull brown—fringed the lips. The eye was grey, or bluish grey, small, well set, and rarely wandering.

The hair was light brown; and the complexion of the face, which had evidently once been blonde, was now nearly as dark as that of a half-breed. Sun-tan had produced this metamorphosis. The countenance was prepossessing; it might have been once handsome. Its expression was bold but good-humored, and bespoke a kind and generous nature."

The dress of this individual was the well-known costume of his class—a hunting-shirt of dressed deer skin, smoked to the softness of a glove; leggings reaching to the hips, and fringed down the seams; moccasins of true Indian make, soled with buffalo hide (parfleche).
The hunting shirt was belted around the waist, but on above, so as to leave the throat and part of the breast uncovered; but over the breast could be seen the undershirt, of finer material—the dressed skin of the young antelope, or the fawn of the fallow deer. A short cape, part of the hunting-shirt hung gracefully over the shoulders, ending in a deep fringe cut out of the buckskin itself. A similar fringe embellished the draping of the skirt. On the head was a raccoon cap —the feet of the animal over the front, while the barred tail, like a plume, fell drooping over the left shoulder.

The accoutrements were a bulletpouch, made from the undressed skin of a tiger-cat, ornamented with the head of the beautiful summer-duck. This hung under the right arm, suspended by a shoulder-strap; and attached in a similar manner was a huge crescent-shaped horn, upon which was carved many a strange souvenir. His arms consisted of a knife and pistol—both stuck in the waist-belt —and a long rifle, so straight that the line of the barrel seemed scarcely to deflect from that of the butt.

But little attention had been paid to ornament in either his dress, arms or equipments; and yet there was a gracefulness in the hang of his tunic-like shirt, a stylishness about the fringing and bead-embroidery, and an air of jauntyness in the set of the "coon skin cap, that showed the wearer was not altogether unmindful of his personal appearance. A small pouch or case, ornamented with stained porcupine quills, hung down upon his breast. This was the pipe-holder—no doubt a gaga d'amour from some dark-eyed, dark-skinned dandy, like himself a denizen of the wilderness.

CORRESPONDENCE.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions or statements of our correspondents.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR.—On Thursday evening, 5th inst., the people of Covehead and surrounding districts received a rare and very welcome treat in the form of a lecture from Prof.
Anderson, of Prince of Wales College, Charlottetown, on the important subject of "Education."

The Professor's ability as a lecturer, and experience as an educationalist were sufficient guarantees for all who were in the least interested in education to attend, and notwithstanding the unfavorable state of the roads, quite a number availed themselves of the opportunity of hearing the lecture. At 6 o'clock, Wm. Shaw, Esq., took the chair in compliance with a vote of those present, and in a few words introduced the lecturer, who was listened to with the greatest attention to the end.

It would be impossible to give anything like a minute account of the lecture here.
The Prof. dwelt at some length on the working of our Public School Act, and showed in one or two places where the Act might be amended to good advantage; but was of the opinion that our educational system would compare favorably with that of any other country of equal wealth and size.

On the lecturer resuming his seat a vote of thanks was unanimously given, to which he responded in suitable terms, and expressed his willingness to lecture again to the people of Covehead.

A lively discussion on the working of the present School Act followed, in which D.
McKay, Esq., M. P., S. McMillan, Esq., M. L. C., and Messrs. A. T. Kesteven, and J. G. McCallum took a lively part. After another vote of thanks, to the chairman, the meeting quietly broke up.

Yours, etc.

ONE WHO WAS PRESENT.

Covehead, Jan. 10, 1882.

Agricultural Notes.

We understand the Lord Mayor of London has signified his desire to become a life member of the Royal Agricultural Society of England.

Young colts require grain for the first year of their lives at least. They need the most nutritious food when weaned from their mother's milk. The use of cereals will prevent checking the growth of young animals arising from the sudden change of food. If they are stunted in food at this juncture, they may never recover from its effects.

Mr. H. M. Jenkins, the secretary of the Royal Agricultural Society, has addressed a letter to Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools, asking them to give the results of their experience as to the need of textbooks in agriculture suitable to the pupils in elementary schools under the several standards of the existing Code of the Education Department; and also as to the need of diagrams illustrating the animals of the farm, the implements used in agriculture, the various plants which are cultivated as farm crops, the most common weeds, &c.

A correspondent of The National Live Stock Journal points out, as a rule, one of the chief causes of early decay in horses is the forced growth of colts. As a matter of fact, however, he cites several important exceptions, which have been distinguished on the track. Nevertheless, his opinion is that the premature growth of colts has the tendency to degenerate the breed, by entailing the over-worked debility on their issue, which may become hereditary, and be transmitted to future generations. Early ripping fruit is the first to decay. In order to prevent the spread of disease, he suggests that it would be advisable not to over feed, or over-train colts, but to gradually develop their speed, so as not to weaken their bodily powers before they are matured.
