CHAPTER XVI

"Yes — many sons," she agreed. "But it is good to have a daughter first. Then, if I die, she will be M'fani. There must always be a M'fani."
She spoke so seriously that he peered at her again curiously through the darkness.
"That is how you look at it," he said. "But I expect your chief will want a son first to carry on his name and to be chief after him."
"No, that is only on other islands," she corrected him emphatically. "Here on Arafu it is different. It is always the women who carry on the name. My mother was M'fani — and her mother — and her mother. There has always been a M'fani on Arafu. And when there is no M'fani there will be no Arafu."
He stared down at her in dawning comprehension. Matriarchy cropped up in places all over the Pacific, he knew, but what made this particularly interesting was that it explained the girl's peculiar status in Strang's household.

It would appear from what she had said that she was the hereditary chieftainess of Arafu, and by making her his protegee as a child, Strang had evidently gained a political hold over the natives, which must have proved a powerful weapon in the process of his ascendancy.
It was an illuminating revelation of the cleverness of the trader's methods, and it also helped to explain her fear for this legendary chief's safety when he put in his appearance. Obviously, Strang would oppose any step which would be liable to lead to her independence and a possible assumption of her hereditary power, and both she and her prophetic friend Tsembao apparently realized the fact. Incidentally, it shed new light on the trader's remarks about her on the evening previous.
He had evidently had no objection to Thurlow taking her as his mistress — which was what he had been hinting at — because that could only tend to alienate her still further from her people. The only wonder was that he had not taken her already himself — though that was probably due to the fact that he knew she disliked him.
He would have pursued the topic, but already they could see a lightening in the darkness ahead which indicated they were approaching the seaward end of the plantation and a few minutes later they emerged upon the sandy beach which fringed the lagoon and within fifty yards of the first of the native houses.

They turned and began to walk along the beach towards the village and as they did so Thurlow noticed an unusual feature of the night scene, which set him wondering. It was the glow of a large fire, which was apparently burning in the open space before the Residency. The usual string of cooking fires gleamed on the steep slope leading up the plateau between the two lines of "fales" but this was evidently a much bigger blaze — though they could not actually see the flames from down below.
"Hallo! What's happening up there?" he asked. "That's quite a big fire."
M'fani shook her head. "I don't know," she said and her voice sounded suddenly troubled. "It is something wrong, I think."
"What do you mean?" he demanded. "It isn't one of the houses. That fire's burning out in the open."
She made no reply but quickened her pace as they approached the foot of the slope till she was leading him by a couple of yards.
He followed, wondering what she had meant by her remark, and as they started to ascend the hill between the first of the houses, he became aware of the fact that there was something decidedly unusual going on.

when he pulled over an old stick or a piece of bark. Then Jimmy pounced and that Beetle disappeared.

The cubs watched him. Presently they saw he was working along in the direction of that Yellow Jacket's nest in the bank. Taddy Bear poked Totty Bear. "Do you suppose he'll find that nest in the bank?" said he.

Totty Bear chuckled. "I hope he will," said she. "It will be fun to see what happens. Yes, sir, it will be fun to see what happens."

Jimmy turned aside and began to poke around higher up on the bank. Then he seemed to see the cubs for the first time.

"Hello, cubs," said Jimmy.

The cubs were suddenly bashful. They hesitated. Then Taddy Bear said "Hello," in a small voice, and that is the way the cubs met Jimmy Skunk.

MUSTARD IS THE Flavour Secret OF THIS DELICIOUS Mayonnaise Dressing

Into the well-beaten yolks of 2 eggs stir:

- 2 teaspoons Colman's Mustard
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1 teaspoon powdered sugar
- 2 tablespoons lemon juice
- 1 1/2 cups salad oil

Add oil gradually while beating. If mixture thickens too quickly, add little more lemon juice than remainder of oil.

CANADA PACKERS' JUMBO JACKPOT

$1,000 JACKPOT $100 EVERY WEEK

It's Easy To Win
You may win $100 next Monday night. Simply find all the missing letters in 13 small panels in this advertisement. The missing letters make up the official name of one of the Canada Packers' products advertised here. The Jumbo Jackpot operator may call you next Monday during Zero Hour. Be sure you're ready with the official name of the product. Read the rules carefully. Someone every week is going to win $100—it could be you!

HOW TO PLAY

Every Wednesday, starting May 20th and continuing for 10 weeks, a special advertisement will be published in this newspaper for the Jumbo Jackpot, offering $100 a week for a total of $1,000 in cash prizes.

This advertisement includes a series of panels each advertising a particular product. In these panels (small individual ads) letters are left out of words in every-day use—not trick or unusual words.

The problem is: Find all the missing letters and out of them form the correct and official name of one of the products advertised on the Jumbo Jackpot page only. The official names of these individual products are printed at the bottom of the panels advertising them—one of them is the solution to the Jumbo Jackpot and that is the one you must make up from all the missing letters.

You have from Wednesday to Monday inclusive—to find the correct solution.

HOW TO WIN

Zero hour to win the Jumbo Jackpot is from 6:30 to 7:30 every Monday evening, starting May 25th and continuing for 10 weeks. In the event that Monday falls on a holiday, zero hour for that week will be from 6:30-7:30 Tuesday evening.

During zero hour, the Jumbo Jackpot operator makes telephone calls to private residence numbers only, selected at random from the city and vicinity directory. All telephone calls are recorded.

IMPORTANT: If you are called by the Jumbo Jackpot operator and answer the telephone with the usual "hello" or any other salutation, you are disqualified from winning the Jumbo Jackpot.

The Jumbo Jackpot is awarded to the first person called by the Jumbo Jackpot operator and who answers the telephone by stating the correct solution for the week.

The first word or words spoken to the Jumbo Jackpot operator MUST be the official name of the advertised product made up of all the missing letters in the previous Wednesday's Jumbo Jackpot page. So remember—if your phone rings any Monday evening during zero hour it may be the Jumbo Jackpot operator.

Your best bet to win is to answer every call with the winning word or words—nothing more. After you speak, the operator then, and then only, talks to you, and tells you if you won or not.

Anyone who answers the telephone can win the Jumbo Jackpot; the winner need not be the person in whose name the telephone is listed. No further telephone calls are made during Zero Hour after a winner of the Jumbo Jackpot is declared. The Jumbo Jackpot starts at $100 and increases each week by $100 until a winner is declared.

If you live out of town you may be called long-distance by the Jumbo Jackpot operator.

Winners of the Jumbo Jackpot receive their award the same evening where possible and will be required to provide identification upon delivery of the cheque. The decision of the judges is final and no correspondence or other communication will be entered into.

Employees of the advertiser, this newspaper or the advertising agencies associated with this contest and their immediate families are not eligible to win the Jumbo Jackpot.
