Tough Life For Jim Crow As Novel Attack Is Launched In Saskatchewan

Government Offers Prizes For Banded Pests—Guns Ring Out

By Andy McDermott (Central Press Canadian Writer) REGINA, Sask., June 15—Johnny Mac Jim Crow, Saskatchewan's Public Enemy No. 1:

There's a price of $500 on his head and other amounts varying from $25 to $1 are offered for his relatives, including his famous moll, Magpie Meg.

Every Saskatchewan citizen, from the little boys who use B-B guns to grandpops, and his Indian gun, are to be seen these days, tramping the wheat fields, hunting around bluffs where a few trees may be found, clambering over barbed wire fences, driving along roads in cars, their eyes all searching only one thing—Jim Crow.

With ammunition sales mounting to a height they never attained before in the "off season" the gun industry folk are right behind the movement. Wipe out Jim Crow! It rings everywhere.

Why? Because the Saskatchewan government, through Hon. W. F. Kerr, minister of natural resources, has started the biggest sweepstakes of its kind on the American continent. There are $3,500 for prizes in this shoot-the-crow campaign! Top prize is $500.

Almost every day in May J. R. Hill, game commissioner, and his assistants, journeyed from Regina to Moose Jaw Wild Animal Park where crows, trapped by members of the Saskatchewan Fish and Game League all over the province, are waiting in big pens to be banded and released. By the end of May nearly 500 of the 856 birds needed were to be trapped, sent to the park for banding, crated and sent to other parts of the province, released, and then shot at.

Already thousands of crows have been killed and the campaign is hardly under way.

Campaign Against Bird

The crow, a carrion bird, and the magpie, his black and-white companion, wage a ceaseless war on the bird life of the province and for years the game league has been trying to stir up hatred against the birds. They have finally received government support to the extent of $3,500 divided into 856 prizes.

Just as many birds will be banded and released. Shooters will keep the bands until Dec. 1 when the contest closes. An envelope containing the list of prizes and numbers placed opposite and known only to Judge A. E. Bence, K.C., Battleford, has been placed in a safety deposit box and will not be opened until the closing day.

WITHIN a few weeks, The Guardian will present someone with their choice of a brand new 1936 Chevrolet Coach or $800.00 cash and another person will get the choice of a Ford V-8 Tudor Sedan or $650.00 cash for soliciting subscriptions to this newspaper. Will that someone be yourself or will you permit this great opportunity to pass you by without giving it a try?

See the double page announcement in today's Guardian and read every word it contains. The next step will be to bring in the Entry Blank, get to work, keep working and make your reward a new automobile.

This is Entry Week and those contemplating taking part in the race should not wait another minute to start. More votes are given during the first week in the campaign than are given later. Generous cash prizes are offered during the first week in addition to the regular commission on subscriptions. Sell 12 one-year subscriptions and 1 six-months' subscription, or 25 six-months' subscriptions during the first week and you will be paid $5 CASH. Get busy at once while subscriptions are easy to get! Don't let the other fellow get ahead of you.

It costs you absolutely nothing to enter and you cannot lose. You are guaranteed 20% commission paid every week on each new or renewal subscription you sell.

An entry blank is printed in this issue which counts 5,000 votes for entering. This gives you a flying start and puts you well ahead on the road to a successful finish. Clip the entry blank, bring it or mail it to the Guardian Office NOW!

The campaign office at the Guardian will be open from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. for your convenience. The Campaign Manager will be glad to give you additional information if you will telephone 133 or call at the Guardian Office.

Old Jim Crow is having a tough time in Saskatchewan, and no joyous singing marks their sojourn in the province. In fact the longer they keep quiet the longer they live for the government has hit upon a novel scheme of getting rid of the pests by banding hundreds of them (Left) and letting them loose to be shot at, each band being worth a prize. Thousands have already been shot in search of the prize bands.

not turned in? Department officials just smile. That'll make a nice start for next year's campaign," they reply.

The band is a small metal strip that is attached to the left leg of each crow. It takes a keen eye to see it at 30 yards so the government anticipates plenty of un-banded crows will be shot before the banded birds are found. Game Commissioner Hill and his aides carefully keep check of where the crows are captured, what band they receive and where they are released. When they are shot and the bands turned in the government will have a complete record of migratory habits of the crow, of which little is known. Birds are released in an area entirely unrelated to that wherein they were captured.

Problein to Trap Crows

Originally announced to get under way May 1, the campaign did not really get under way until near the middle of the month, as trapping the crows proved a real problem. The government, through the game league, offered plans of 150 types of traps but results appeared disappointing. To offset the cost of building the traps the government is paying 15 cents for each crow banded. They must then be crated and shipped to the Wild Animal Park for banding. Charges of shipping are collect. It has given country lads plenty to do.

It is probable that early in June the birds caught in the northern part of the province will be tagged at Battleford and shipped to the southern half for release in order of speed up the work of getting 856 birds in the "money" class. Inspired by Saskatchewan's campaign, Manitoba has polined in on a smaller scale. There $100 is being paid as prize money. It looks like Alberta, home of Social Credit, will shortly become a haven for buskshot-shy crows and magpies.

Legion Gunman Tells Of Death Plot

(A. P. By Guardian's Special Wire) DETROIT, June 15—Dayton Dean testified today that N. Ray Markland, former Mayor of nearby Highland Park, conspired repeatedly that he would be ruined politically unless Dean and other Black Legion gunmen succeeded in their persistent efforts to kill the fighting editor of the community newspaper.

Markland is one of 12 men charged with conspiracy to murder Arthur F. Kingsley, the editor whose newspaper helped defeat him for re-election in 1934.

Dean, the Black Legion's confessed "executioner" in the slaying of Charles A. Fogle, calmly told a packed courtroom at the examination of 11 of the 12 defendants today of signing in blood an oath with other members to carry out the plot.

Get Rid of the Rooster

The rooster has no place in the modern flock after the last setting of eggs has been laid. In most farms and commercial poultry yards roosters are sold as soon as the brooding season is past. This is done where the male birds are not especially valuable, in case they are valuable, making it advisable to retain them, they should be separated from the hens and kept in an individual pen through the Summer and Fall. Only those roosters that are especially good should be saved for next year's breeding.

As a general thing, several roosters may be put in one pen without causing trouble. It must be remem-

Stolen Mystery Trawler Wanders Seas In Search Of Buried Treasure?

"Girl Pat" Last Reported In Distress Off Coast Of French Guiana

(By Central Press Canadian)

HALIFAX, N. S., June 15—Latest report is that the "Girl Pat," mysterious, pirate treasure ship, has been sighted off the coast of French Guiana. Police all over the world are on the lookout for her. Said to have been stolen from a North Sea fishing fleet near Grimsby, England, this British trawler, with powerful Diesel engines, is thought to have been heading for South America and thence up the coast to Canada.

She is also linked, it is stated, with stolen Spanish treasure buried on an island somewhere in the Atlantic and guarded by the remains of a murdered Spanish sea captain. Wherein lies the connection between the treasure (reportedly on the Salvage Islands South America, and Canada is just one of the mysteries surrounding this vessel.

The story of the treasure goes back to 1804 when Spain was at war with England. Two ships met on the Atlantic a hundred or so miles off the Spanish coast. One, Cadiz-bound, was flying the Spanish colors, the other from Holland. They spoke as they passed. For the first time the Spanish captain learned that his country was at war. He also learned that English men-of-war stretched from Trafalgar to Cape Finisferre, and that a safe passage to Spain on this route was impossible. Rather than let his treasure, valued at approximately $2,000,000 then and almost five times as much now, fall into the hands of the British, he decided to turn back. His crew, already in a mutinous state of mind, did not see why they should endure hardships to save the treasure for King Philip. Although the treasure never fell into the hands of the English neither did it reach Spain.

The crew got their opportunity to mutiny one daybreak when the ship was passing a cluster of islands unknown to them and seemingly uninhabited. Knives flashed and the captain was murdered on his own deck and the ship fell into the hands of the mutineers, who dropped anchor and set out in small boats with the treasure. On the sand, well above high-water mark, they buried the treasure, placing on top of it the body of the captain.

Their treasure hidden, the mutineers went back to the ship intending to run it aground on some island and burn it. They succeeded in running aground, but all but two of the crew were killed. Of the two survivors, only one lived to tell the tale of gold. He also died before he could give the exact whereabouts. As he was dying he took a fellow-patient, Christian Cruise, into his confidence.

After keeping the secret to himself for five long years, Cruise eventually had to tell someone, so he went to the British admiralty. They believed his story and sent a King's ship to the islands with Christian Cruise aboard. When they reached the island a landing party was sent ashore. They dug deeply into the white sands but found nothing. With treacherous reefs and no safe anchorage off the islands, and bad weather brewing, they were forced to return to their ship.

The "Girl Pat," it is indicated, is on to the Salvages. On April 1 she left her home port and three days later arrived at Dover. Here her engineer went ashore and when he returned she had gone. Next reports stated she had arrived at and left Spain. Coreubion evidently was her next port-of-call, which she reached on April 12. After a twelve-day stay in port for repairs she left, leaving a bill equivalent to $1,175. After a month's disappearance she again showed up at the Senegal port of Dakar with a sick man aboard who was reported to be her mate. Lloyd's agents were prepared to pay the insurance. When she left port again and was not seen for some time the owners and Lloyd's agreed the ship was not lost but stolen. Charges of bribery were laid against the crew and police all over the world are looking for her.

Nothing more was heard of her until June when the authorities at Dakar reported she was headed for South America and possibly planning to sail up the eastern coast to Canada. Where they got their information was not disclosed. Although she has not been reported at sea since she left Dakar it is still a mystery why a Grimsby trawler, the "Girl Pat," would want to visit Canada, a long way from Salvage Islands and buried treasure.
