ELLEN'S DIARY

Sun And Blue Sky Follow In Wake Of January Thaw

And now in the wake of the January thaw, and the snowflurries following it, there was sun and blue sky today. The world of field and tree was lightly white-spread. And frosted gently, it sparkled when we came to our morning.

"Look and see how cold it is on the glass, Ellen" James said to us on the back verandah when he stepped away from it in the direction of the barns.

"It's 6 above" we said.

"Cool enough," he offered. "But . . ."

". . . it's a pretty morning", we smiled.

And the January month was passing. Already we were counting down the remaining days. Soon the first leaflet would be taken from the new calendar.

And, we thought of the children in the house across the lane. Christmas would be then approximately only eleven months away.

Time would fly. But in that interval, what rare delights should be ours: Lilacs we should have. How we would love them, bending down a spray of bloom more than once to inhale deeply of its fragrance. The apple-bloom too. Let every last tree in orchard, or wilding of hedgerow be showered this spring time, and every last summer-flower be born to bloom

Let the summer days' ahead be saturated with every lovely sense of mind and weather. And let them linger through long hours, until the sun would reluctantly bid beneath glowing banners and the afterlight fade, and the purpling shadows fall.

But this was a winter day. At the shed-door, across the yard from where we stood, Mack was arranging sticks on a sled, for the woodbox in the house across the lane. Seample, sat near by, watching the progress of the work. . .

What knowing creatures dogs are! Intelligent, indeed often uncannily so, and faithful friends. Presently he would accompany Mack to his door. But later when he would come from there carrying his schoolbooks, Seample would make no effort to attend him on his way. But in the afternoon, when he should catch sight of Mack nearing beyond the hilltop, barking happily, he would bound away to meet him at lane's end.

"Yes is it — a pretty morning, this" Mack agreed. "And", he added, on a wistful note, "it will be a nice afternoon in the woods. I kind of wish. . ."

"Don't think of it", we chuckled. "On a schoolday, don't let a thought of that come to mind".

"And that," he smiled, starting to move the sled across the yard toward his home, "is easier said than done!"

Woods' work this afternoon, there was. And home from it the farmers came while the afterglow still brightened the sky above the dark velvet of woodlands to the west. Happily to have added substantially to the heap of sticks already won. And then supper past, the evening star appeared before the house on the hill and twilight gently falling dimmed the valley.

And a door opened.

And Granddaughter, missing last night from the family circle, was again come home!

Until tomorrow — — Diary — Goodnight. . . . .

MARY HAWORTH

Divorce, Remarriage Are Not Solution To Problem

Dear Mary Haworth: During a trip several years ago I met a man who loves me dearly. I also love him very much. I do not think any two people could love more dearly than we.

We both are married, with families. We have met several times secretly and discussed the possibility of divorcing our mates ,whom neither of us really love.

We never can give each other up. It seems as though we are made for each other, our tastes and interests are so congenial.

The man is helping me to meet and solve several of my financial problems. We would like to settle the whole thing peaceably and get married. Neither of us will be satisfied until we are married to each other. Please give us your guidance. Sincerely, G.S.

Dear G.S.: You would like to trad: in your old lives for an updated, supposedly finer, new model. But the fact is it cannot be done.

If you were to try as many do, you would simply be cutting your life and his to pieces, with the result that each of you would be thereafter more a fragment than a whole person.

The familiar scriptural injunction that God- made marriage is for keeps was not intended to hinder the human race in its quest for joy. Rather, it represents the most effective way to safeguard love from the vagaries and moods of human nature, thus giving it maximum survival insurance

If sudden desire could dissolve marriages, then sex attraction leading to conjugal association and parenthood soon would be meaningless and there would be — a nightmare of chaos for all involved.

My advice is to wake up to the realities of your situation. You have drifted into a liaison and are beginning to be fettered by self-indulgence in this respect, a state of affairs that gives rise to your current confused conviction that divorce and remarriage are necessary to revive your sense of autonomy.

The only road to freedom of soul, open to either or both of you, is to break off this furtive alliance and rededicate yourselves to your legitimate family obligations.— M.H.

Dear Mary Haworth: Apropos the wistful letter from the 13-year-old school girl of Russian parentage, whose American schoolmates laugh at her "different" ways, I regret to say that is not an isolated happening.

The national capital residential area where I live is populated by intelligent people, many of whom are government personnel or widely traveled military families. Yet even here I notice that school children from other lands are often rejected by their peers.

For example I know three school girls — two British, one from Pakistan— who've only just become "socially accepted" after two years' probation. The same inhospitable spirit exists among their elders towards adults from other countries.

The widely advertised American friendliness is often very superficial, a matter of a casual big smile that cloaks inner indifference.

So many otherwise intelligent Americans seem very ignorant of the peoples and cultures of the world, partly, I think, because even when overseas, they tend to move in self- contained circles and prefer American goods and foods. Similarly, on their home ground Americans live self-enclosed lives that tend to screen out the stranger from the foreign shore. Faithfully yours, E.N.

Dear Mary Haworth: My husband dislikes going to church. He says the sermons are dull, the seats uncomfortable, the church stuffy and most of the people who attend are hypocrites.

He feels that he is serving God during the week by being charitable, a good husband, living up to the Ten Commandments, etc. This is true, he really is a very good person.

I tell him that as God has been so good to us, the least we can do is go to church, but he feels one shouldn't go just as a duty. He plays a lot of golf on Sundays and says he can appreciate God more in the open than in church. He works hard all week and this is the only time he can exercise.

He is 26, I am 24 and we have no children yet. But I am trying to plan ahead for when they arrive. I feel it is important for children to attend church with both parents. We are both Protestants and always have been. I am very unhappy going to church without my husband. What do you advise? — E. S.

Dear E. S.: Just last evening I was reading a book that defined grace in its theological sense as God's free gift to men of a share in His own nature.

The author, Robert W. Gleason, S. J., Chairman of the Department of Theology at Fordham University, cites 2 Peter 1:4 as reporting that Christians are "sharers in the divine nature" in terms of being partakers of God's gift of grace.

But earlier the author has referred also to the inscrutable statement in scripture that God endows the talents of those whom He will and he has mercy upon whom He will.

Those fortunate enough to receive the gift of grace—in terms of grateful and loving awareness of God's reality and goodness — are thereby enabled to become, if they will, sons of God. But the choice is theirs.

They may elect to ignore, resist and turn aside from the gentle promptings of grace. They may stiffen their neck and go their own way, evolving their own private logic to quiet their conscience, instead of alerting themselves to learn ever more of God's word and disciplining themselves to follow its lead.

From the theological view marriage is a sacramental as well as a natural relationship, making as its sacramental aim the sanctifeication of man and wife each aiding the other, and also in most instances facilitating the divine ordinance to produce children.

Which brings us to your stalemate with your husband.

I think he is neglecting the promptings of grace in disregarding your wish to share church-going with him. He is straining against the sacramental character of marriage in refusing to make the loving sacrifice of squiring you to Sunday worship to praise and thank God for His goodness to both of you.

Further, as a nominal Christian he is behaving with a most un-Christian spirit in pointing the finger of scorn at the church —its seats, its sermons and its "hypocrite" congregation — blaming everyone but himself for his slighting treatment of God. In effect, he is overlooking the beam in his own eye.

Moreover, he is not living up to the Ten Commandments when he fails to "keep holy the Sabbath day."

Our Lord has said that "where two or more are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them." It is in this sense that faithful attendance at public worship brings the individual into closer attunement to God, regardless of how dull the sermon or how cramped the pew.

Naggibh won't edify your husband; but maybe this exchange will start him thinking and perhaps he'll change of his own volition. M.H.

FILM DIRECTOR DIES

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — John Farrow, 56, movie director and producer, was found dead of an apparent heart attack in his home in Beverly Hills Sunday night. Farrow's wife, actress Maureen O'Sullivan, was in New York appearing in a play.

HAPPENINGS

The Charlottetown branch of the Canadian Federation of University Women met at the home of Mrs. Frank Lewis, Pownal on Thursday, January 24. Arrangements were made for the group to provide lunch for the social at Riverside Hospital on January 31.

The next meeting of the club will be in the form of a Career Night for female P.W.C. students. Six club members will speak on their professions, training requirements, etc. at Montgomery Hall on Wednesday, February 13.

Plans were made to sponsor a concert by Miss Maida Rogerson sometime in March.

Mr. Christopher Gledhill, MA, B. Mus. Oxon, spoke on the topic "The Relevance of Music." In introducing his theme, the speaker showed great wit and social perception in outlining some of the cultural aspects of band life which affect the role of music on P.E.I. Mr. Gledhill emphasized that music is part of the search for truth and that it belongs to the main stream of the liberal arts. In 18th century England, the literary artists denounced opera as "erratic and irrational" and thus killed the development of English opera. These writers of the Age of Reason, however, were deficient in their literary style because of their dislike of music, whereas the German authors of the period maintained an active interest in music and musical criticism.

At the present time, P.E.I. provides for a comprehensive program of music in the schools but this program is not being implemented in many schools because of a lack of trained personnel to so do. Mr. Gledhill said he would like to see a greater striving for excellence in musical performance and a larger part of the population participating in musical activities.

Lunch was served while the group discussed ways of developing the musical interest and ability of the pre-school child.

The Dr. Zella Clark Mission Circle of the First Baptist Church met recently in the church parlor with the president, Mrs. Walter White in the chair.

She also showed souvenirs and pictures which she had brought home from her trip.

With the president, Lorne Adams in the chair, the meeting opened with a worship service led by Ralph and Vera Howard and Reg Dennis. Helen Dennis was organist.

SIGN TRADE PACT

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union and Japan signed a new three-year trade agreement Monday which makes no provision for further sales of pipe for Soviet oil pipelines. The United States has been pressing Japan, West Germany and Britain to stop delivery of the pipe the Russians are using in the pipeline network they are pushing toward west European markets. The Americans contend that the Soviet network would pose a military as well as an economic threat to the West.

The Birthday Cake Should Be Elegant And Delicious

A BIRTHDAY is a personal event. A birthday cake should be the best one can offer the giftee, an elegant- looking, personally baked loaf with happy birthday good wishes.

The number of candles alight not more than fifty or maybe only 21 — enough to blow out easily if set together on one half of the cake top, when one big "whoosh" extinguishes them without huffing and puffing around the edge of the cake.

Here is how to make our newest birthday cake "delectable", fresh from the test kitchen.

Measurements are level

BIRTHDAY CAKE EUROPEAN

¾ cup butter or margarine, room-soft

1½ cups granulated sugar

1 teaspoon pure vanilla extract

3 eggs, unbeaten

2 1-3 cups pre-sifted cake flour

2½ teaspoons double-acting baking powder

½ teaspoon salt

2-3 cup milk

1 cup packaged grated coconut

Creamy Custard Filling (follows)

Coffee Butter Cream Frosting (follows)

½ packaged grated coconut (additional) toasted

Add eggs one at a time, beating well after each.

Sift together flour, baking powder and salt. Add to first mixture alternately with milk.

Stir in 1 cup grated coconut.

Pour batter into 2 (9-inch) or 3 (8 inch) layer pans lined on bottoms with paper and oiled on sides. Bake 35 to 40 minutes in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) or until top of cake springs back when pressed lightly.

Cool.

Spread Creamy Custard Filling between layers and Coffee Butter Cream Frosting over top and sides of cake.

Dust toasted coconut around sides and top edge of cake.

Arrange birthday cake candles in crescent-shaped rows on one side of cake.

Young Couple Pledge Vows At Souris Wedding Ceremony

St. Mary's Church, Souris was the scene of a pretty wedding on Nov. 15, 1962, when Vivian Agnes Marie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Dunphy, became the bride of Charles Kenneth Madore, son of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Madore of Souris.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. E. Cash, who also celebrated the nuptial Mass, while Sister St. Felix was in charge of the wedding music.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was lovely in her floor length wedding gown of white nylon net and lace over rayon satin. Her shoulder length veil was held in place by a bridal halo of simulated pearls on covered clip and she carried a bouquet of white and pink roses with ribbon bow and streamers.

Miss Gertrude Bushey as bridesmaid was gowned in a street length dress of red velvet. Her headdress was a white velvet pillbox and veil and she carried a bouquet of yellow and white mums with ribbon streamers.

Mr. Frederick Madore, brother of the groom, was best man.

A wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride in Souris, following the ceremony and a supper at the home of the bride that evening where many useful and appropriate gifts were received.
