ELLEN'S DIARY

Blossoms And Young Robins Lend Magic To June-Time

"Well, well, they're getting on now with the cropping!" Papa Starling offered with a funny little chuckle, of our farmers this morning. 'And I would venture to say that this will be a long, long day of work.' It proved to be. Early the workers were in the fields. It was past the dusk when they returned to respective homes.

Now is the actual seeding: the grain and the grass, the seeds being carried not by the farmcarts of once, but by the busy little trucks, to this and that field. In one, a tractor drew smartly a modern seeder at the sowing. At Rob's, an ancient "broadcast" was being used. "In the harvest we'll see which machine gives the best return. I believe I'd bet on the old way," he said.

"Oh dear," Mack offered with an expression a bit weary, to when the robins in the nest in the white birch were chirping sleepily, and he was on the path to the house across the lane, and his studies, "I can still hear the tractor's beat in my ears! I harrowed a nice few acres, since school was let out. Yes, and when you stop to add up everything, we're going to find we got a fine lot done today. There's . . . well it won't be too long now before we're past the half-way mark, and into the home - stretch," he smiled.

"I found out about something," Alex reported this afternoon. "I've been wondering what was is that nest in the birch tree. So Gran'daddy lifted me up until I could look in it. And would you believe it? There's already a baby - robin there!"

'I see the bleeding heart is in flower," James commented at dinner.

"It always blooms when we're at the seeding," we said.

"Tractors a put-puttin' " Papa Starling continued this morning, surveying the fields, from his high doorstep. "Trucks busy a-totin' the seed! And have you noticed? "he queried. "That apple tree at the far side of the house across the lane is putting on its pink and white bloom!"

Scented the wind of this morning was, that stirred the pieces of wash we pinned to the line. . We must remember, we said to ourself, to put a stitch in the fraying hem of that sheet. And set a patch on the knee of James' overalls. There was like material in that little tin trunk upstairs. We picked up the empty clothes - basket, and turned toward the house.

"Let's count tulips, and see which one of them is the prettiest," Alex suggested, coming by. "There are new ones open today."

"Hear the water falling at the spillways!" Granddaughter called from their lawn. 'Peaceful, isn't it? It's a lovely morning," she said.

Continuing sun, and warmth to favor the seeding; apple blossoms, young robins — what more could we on farms wish for, than to have them some time at hand? It was much as we had pictured it, when the snow lay in cold white drifts about, though if anything more enchanting even than we had

We look back along the day's hours. And even as we choose and file away the scenes and sounds we have loved best, Time our guest, lifts noiselessly the latch, opens and closes the door softly, and goes, where, we know not. We are now at day's end.

Until tomorrow ——Diary— Good-night. . .

Summer Festival Season Marks Tenth Anniversary

LITERALLY millions of visitors, many whole families, will be our guests here in New York City during the summer months. Already they are arriving by plane, train, bus, car and even by boat to enjoy the city with its festival decorations, flowers, flags and fireworks, as well as to take in a host of special entertainment events.

This year marks the tenth anniversary of the "New York Is a Summer Festival" season.

OUTDOOR EVENTS

Many of the events are held outdoors in parks and stadiums where, for little or nothing, you can see some of the world's finest music and drama. There'll be chamber music in Washington Square, symphony and ballet at Lewisohn Stadium, Shakespeare in Central Park.

Many traditional nationality and neighborhood celebrations are also held in summertime, such as the Italian Festa di San Antonia, the Japanese Feast of O-Bon and the famous Washington Square Outdoor Art Show.

Summer is also the best time to take in New York's many fascinating sightseeing attractions. It's a good idea to start out by taking a sightheeing bus tour or the famous boat ride around Manhattan Island. They provide a pleasant introduction to the city and point up the places you will want to visit at your leisure.

FAVORITE SPOTS

According to the New York Convention and Visitors Bureau, the "Big Five" among Gotham's perennnial visitor favorites are the Empire State Building, Rockefeller Center, the Satue of Liberty, Times Square and the United Nations.

New York City has restaurants of many nationalities as well as our own American ones.

Beginning next week the Chef and I will take you via this column to visit a group of them —one a week—and give you some of their chefs' best recipes to try at home.

MR. AND MRS. DONALD MCRAE

Island Girl Weds Scotland Native In Toronto Ceremony

Glenview Presbyterian Church, Toronto, was the scene of a lovely spring wedding, when Irene Gwenneth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Reginald E. Parkman, East Royalty, Prince Edward Island, became the bride of Christopher Donald, son of Mr. and Mrs. Christopher M. McRae, Inverness, Scotland.

The double ring ceremony was performed by Rev. James H. Williams. The organist was Mr. Henry Rosevear and the soloist was Miss Marion Farrow who sang "Wedding Prayer" and "The Lord's Prayer."

Given in marriage by her uncle, Alfred L. Mallett of London, Ontario, the bride looked radiant in her French nylon organza - over - taffeta gown with sabrina neckline dipping to a shallow V in the back, long lilly - point sleeves, and bell skirt accented by a back waist bow sweeping to a chapel train. A crown of pearls and crystals held her finger - tip veil of double silk illusion. She carried a bouquet of pink roses, white stephanotis and a sprig of heather. White satin streamers knotted with pink rose buds fell gracefully down the front of her skirt.

The bride's attendants were her sister Jean (Mrs. David McGuey), her cousin Beth (Mrs. Richard Webber), and Miss Betty Lou Wallington. Gowned alike in street length dresses of flowered pink brocade, they wore matching pill box hats and carried bouquets of pink and white carnations.

John MacRae was groomsman for his cousin. The guests were ushered by Robert Weir and Donald MacKillop.

After the ceremony, the bride's aunt Mrs. A. L. Mallett of London, and the groom's aunt Mrs. Alexander MacRae received the guests in the floral room at the "Prince George Hotel."

A toast to the bride was proposed by Richard Weber and responded to by the groom. A toast to the bridesmaids was proposed by John MacRae who also read telegrams of felicitation from telegrams and friends in Scotland, Prince Edward Island and Nassau in the Bahamas.

After the cake had been cut, Kevin O'Molloy and some members of his band entertained the guests with a number of songs. The bride and groom led the first dance.

For a wedding trip to Florida the new Mrs. McRae changed to a moss - green wool walking suit with a matching green straw hat. Her corsage was of rusty gold roses with a spring of heather.

On their return the young couple took up residence in Toronto where the groom is employed by the Robert Simpson Co. Ltd.

MARY HAWORTH

Pretty Girl Has Mental Block Against Marriage

Dear Mary Haworth: I am a single woman, 28, considered extraordinarily pretty by general agreement.

I seem to have a mental block against marriage. I have had very many marriage proposals and would love to have a family of my own. Yet when I have to decide, I back away in a sort of retreat from involvement.

I belong to a large family whose members are very upset about this. They want to know why I won't marry and I can't tell them why.

When I hear occasionally that a former boy friend has married, I feel very hurt and remorseful. I can't explain the extent of it.

Once I even went back to the man after he had got engaged to another girl. Whereupon he broke their engagement because he still loved me. At that, she married someone else and then I left him flat, as before.

When I think of it I actually hate myself for such behavior but at the time I can't seem to help it. More than anything I want to stop hurting my boy friends, my family and myself. My dad is up in years and I am his last unmarried child at home and my parents worry about my future security.

How can I overcome this block? Why do I want boy friends to remain wholly faithful to me when I don't love or want them? Why do I experience this terrible hurt when I see them with someone else after I've willingly stopped our relationship?

I need help desperately and anxiously await your excellent advice. —E.W.

Dear E.W.: I would surmise that your mental block against marriage has to do with psychological immaturity, feelings of personal inadequacy as regards sex and emotional frigidity linked to unconscious fear of the responsibilities of wifehood.

This crisscross of inhibiting factors, which (I think) brings you compulsively to a halt when marriage is preferred, may have been ingrained by the circumstances of your rearing.

Maybe you were the middle child, or possibly the youngest child, in a large family and thus, perhaps neglected in the first instance or overly-protected in the second. This, then, caused you to miss the psychologically maturing experience, in formative years, of engaging customarily in a hearty, hardy emotional and social give- and-take with parents, brothers, sisters and miscellaneous family friends of various ages.

As a solitary middle child or an unduly dependent youngest child, you may have steered clear of boy friends and dating while growing up.

Hence it may be that your extraordinary prettiness is chiefly accountable for your charmerrating with men of recent years and that you aren't prepared to deal with their interest in a womanly way.

You may retreat from serious involvement, even while longing to belong to husband and children, because you feel that your prettiness is a hoax; a Cinderella- like camouflage that would dissolve in the light of everyday association, leaving you stripped down to pathetic, baffled inadequacy in realistic encounters with a spouse.

Something of the sort probably accounts for your acute chagrin when you hear that suitors you turned down are marrying other girls. You'd like to remain faithful, at a distance to counter-balance your inner loneliness; also, to give you a "sleeping beauty" type of romantic status— loved and wanted, if unattainable behind your special barricades.

How overcome this block?

Here are two suggestions. 1. By marrying some thoroughly nice lad and awakening to the rewards of devoted interdependency. 2. Or, by undertaking a cram- course of emotional re-education towards maturity with the help of a good psychologist or family relations counsellor.— M.H.

TEACHERS STAY AWAY

MONTREAL (CP) — Sixty-two teachers refused to attend classes Friday, claiming breach of contract by the Mille Isles regional high school board in suburban Isle Jesus. As a result, 1,460 students in four schools—three French and one English speaking—got an unexpected holiday. The teachers resigned when recent negotiations with the school board broke down. When the board announced it would hire new personnel for next year's term, the teachers countered Friday by not reporting to classes.

TAKES MUCH DIGGING

Gold ores may yield less than an ounce per ton.

PREDICTS MORE CRIME

WINNIPEG (CP)—A. J. MacLeod, commissioner of the Canadian penitentiary service says juvenile delinquency is likely to increase during the next few years. There is a danger that by 1971 "we shall not know very much more about the prevention and cure of juvenile delinquency than we did in 1951," he told the opening session of the fourth biennial Canadian Congress of Corrections Tuesday.

TERRORIZE FAMILY

MANIWAKI, Que. (CP) — Wolves are terrorizing a family near here and four young children are not allowed out of the sight of their father, Albert Lamarsh. The problem reached a critical stage Monday when a pack swooped down on the Lamarsh farm, seven miles northwest of Maniwaki, killing two calves and a goat valued at about $200. Mr. Lamarsh said Friday he fired four shots at one of the retreating wolves, wounding him.
