Pigmy-Like Warriors Aid Rebels in Congo

By ROBIN MANNOK LEOPOLDVILLE (AP) — Pigmy-like warriors with spears, backed up by uniformed rebels with machine-guns and mortars, have defeated two companies of Congolese commandos in an ambush in eastern Congo. Fears spread of a rebel attack on the key provincial city of Bukavu.

Radio messages reaching Leopoldville Sunday from the troubled province of Kivu said 60 Congolese soldiers including the field commander, a Maj. Vangu, were missing. Since the rebel attacks started early in May, an estimated 400 Congolese soldiers have been killed, wounded or are missing in Kivu.

The rebels are led by pro-Communists. About 200 miles to the south, meanwhile, Congolese soldiers regained control of the North Katanga provincial capital of Albertville after pro-Communists. About 200 miles to the south, meanwhile, Congolese soldiers regained control of the North Katanga provincial capital of Albertville after pro-Communist rebels had held it for three days. Residents there told newspaper men the rebel seizure was bloodless and that violence broke out only when Congolese troops and police counter-attacked. The residents said about 100 persons are believed to have been killed by the army in reprisals for the rebel takeover. Three European women were reported raped.

The ambush appeared to be another serious blow to regular army morale. Soldiers have refused to venture into rebel country in Kivu after hearing that 50 per cent of one battalion was badly cut up by Gafuieros. But on Thursday, morale got a boost when regular army units with parachute troops killed more than 200 rebels on the Lubarikia Road. The rebels are led by a self-styled colonel, Louis Pitolele, and Moussa Marandura, a Kivu provincial assemblyman. Bisotelo is a former farm cooperative clerk. Marandura gives his men intellect which he tells them—makes them invulnerable to bullets and explosive shells.
