De Gaulle Would Have Firms Adopt Profit-Sharing Plan

PARIS, April 25 — (AP) — Gen. Charles De Gaulle wants French business men to share profits with their employees on a country-wide scale.

The wartime leader of the fighting French heads the rightist opposition to his country's middle-of-the-road government. French voters are split roughly into equal thirds—one behind the parties that back Premier Georges Bidault, another that votes Communist, and a third sympathetic to De Gaulle's Rassemblement Du Peuple Français.

One of the R. P. F.'s basic ideas is that workers and business men ought to co-operate, instead of clashing in strikes and lockouts. De Gaulle calls his plan for getting them together the "association" of capital and labor.

The bill makes the plan voluntary. In the first stages, according to the R. P. F., it might arouse too much opposition if it were compulsory. A right-wing group whose support comes largely from business men, the R. P. F. doesn't want to give labor control over to private businesses. Nor does it think that employees should share in the profits from the purely financial operation of an enterprise.

What it does propose is a contract between the employees and the owners of a firm to fix the proportion of the profits to go to both sides. Each employee would share according to his wages. The management would have the right to put away reserves from profits if they do not distribute, but a share of such profits would have to be credited to the workers.

The plan calls for a "council of exploitation" in each business with members representing the owners, managers, foremen, white collar employees and working men. The council would have the right to ask a report on how the business is being run, and the right to an accounting. Members could "make suggestions."
