The World's Exposition.

The Palace of Fine Arts.

"Infinite Riches in a Little Room."

Eye never rested upon a larger collection of meritorious works of art than that which is now shown in the Palace of Fine Arts at the World's Exposition. The palace has been truly described as the most beautiful of all the exhibition buildings. It is in Ionic style. The graceful figure of an angel with wings outspread is in the act of alighting upon the apex of its highest dome. An appreciative critic has remarked that "from the exterior architectural point of view, it may justly be considered one of the chief of the art exhibits." Inside, the galleries and courts for the exhibition of sculpture and paintings are of varying proportions,--some of them rather too small, most of them ample and grand. The three great sections of the centre, east, and west pavilions, aggregate in extreme length 1132 feet and in depth 504 feet. All the light comes from above. In some of the sections it has been softened and subdued by means of draperies hung gracefully under the windows in the roof. There are four large courts and a rotunda in the central pavilion, and a rotunda in each of the other pavilions for the exhibition of sculpture and architectural drawings.

In this most beautiful of all the great Exposition buildings, there are grouped upwards of eight thousand works of art, occupying about 200,000 square feet of wall space. These works of art are representative of every civilized nation under the sun--except China; and they speak to the eyes and hearts and souls of all who look upon them. There is no need of an interpreter here. The artist, whether Russian or Japanese, Indian or German, French or Spanish, can be understood by all those who visit the Exposition at Chicago. Of course there are some persons who will more clearly apprehend his meaning, according to the bent and culture of their minds and eyes. But no one who will take the trouble to visit the art exhibition can fail to be benefited; if not in the higher sense certainly in the lower. He cannot, for instance, fail to be impressed by the universality of the taste for art and the ability to give it expression. There are masterpieces of modern art from every considerable country. Nor do the best pictures invariably belong to the country which is largest and richest. Those of Poland, though few in number, are up to the highest standard of excellence and reflect the greatest credit upon that little nation abroad country, and its artists, Matjoko, Gattison, Popiel, and Zannoko. The Dutch may well be proud of the works of Israels, Neroux, Artz, Mauve, the two brothers Maris, Bosboom and Mesdag. The Danes stand high as a result of the labors of Tuxen and Croyer. The Norwegians exhibit in Zorn; the Austrians in Munnekey and Broock. Nor is the Canadian exhibit, made up largely of the works of Harris, Reid, Peal, Holden and O'Brien, one of which Canadians need feel ashamed. The Canadian pictures compare favorably with those produced in other countries. The "Foreclosure of the Mortgage" by Reid, which is the largest canvas in the Canadian courts, touches the sympathy of every observer, and at the same time conveys the important lesson that running into debt and mortgaging the farm are apt to beget trouble.

But the largest number of pictures and sculptures are of course shown by the older and wealthier nations of the world. The United States exhibits here nearly three thousand works of art--many, however, having been loaned by wealthy gentlemen who purchased them in England and in Europe. Great Britain comes next with eleven hundred and thirty. France exhibits 989 and Germany 672. There is a wealth of strong color in most of the larger German pictures, the leading artists being Max Leubach, Gabriel Max and Von Uhd. In the French section the best artists represented are Bonnat, Caroux-Durans, Gigoux, Girardot, Bougeureau, Agache, Tissot, Gervey, and Collin. This section contains some of the best and some of the worst of the pictures in the great collection. The school of the "impressionists" has had a great development in France, and the highest examples of it are shown in the French department. According to the way in which we usually look at nature, it is unnatural. There is, for instance, a picture of two horses which seem to be standing in the midst of lilac color. At first, this style of art is unpleasant. I suppose that, like tomatoes and bananas, the taste for it has to be cultivated; for the artists like it. A badly-drawn picture in the style of the impressionists is more abominable than anything I can imagine on earth. But that a strong, and beautiful, and pleasing effect can be produced in it when the work is done by a master hand, we have many undoubted proofs here. It has been remarked that going through the French section imparts much the same feeling as the reading of Don Juan or the novels of Ouida. It is very bright, very æsthetic, and yet there is something in it, if I mistake not, that modest American women would rather not see there. There are nude figures in all the art exhibits which suggest purity and modesty to all but those to whom nothing is pure. But all the naked figures in the French section are not of this kind. While the French department attracts the greater number of visitors, the British department is regarded with the greatest respect. We see little or nothing concerning the latter in the Chicago newspapers, and yet there will be found here hundreds of earnest and cultured Americans, who are outspoken in their opinion, as expressed by the elderly female, "I like the English the best. Don't you?" The tone of the work of Sir Frederick

Leighton, Alma Tadema, and Poynter; of Frank Holl, Oules, Millais, Herkomer and Watts; of Stanhope, Forbes, Frank Bramley, Tuke, Frieh and Shannon is impressive upon the minds of all those, who, of whatever country and however much disposed to be critical, are lovers of truth and faithfulness.

But your true citizen of the great Republic will never see anything quite equal, in point of size or in point of quality, to that which is produced in the United States. There is indeed exhibited in the United States department of the Art Palace a wonderful development of artistic ability. Considering the comparative youth of the great Republic, and the fact that the mass of its inhabitants has had no higher ambition than to amass wealth, the works of Sargeant, Innes, Tebbse, Whistler and their fellow artists, as shown upon these walls, are in the highest degree creditable. They prove conclusively that the sons of America can excel in respect to the fine arts as well as in respect to the mechanic arts. Some of them have, in imitation of la France, adopted the style of the Impressionists. But the most of them are content, like the artists of other nations, to follow nature and to attempt the formation of a school of their own.

Taken for all in all, the Palace of Fine Arts attracts the attention of the visiting public at large more strongly than any of the other great features of the Exposition. Some take particular interest in the Machinery Hall, some in the Agricultural or the Horticultural Buildings, but all want to see the masterpieces of art in painting and in sculpture, which are here on exhibition.

The Yott Case.

KINGSTON, May 22.--The big ferry steamer Pierpont has carried many a visitor to Wolfe Island recently to interview Mr. L. Yott, a farmer of that island whose wonderful cure by Dodd's kidney pills was recently published in these columns.

The publication of so many marvellous cures had already excited much interest in this country, and now that we have proof of what has been said of this remedy at our very doors it is taken of on all sides. Mr. Yott's case was one that had excited the pity and anxiety of everyone for many years, and now that he is well and strong the people are greatly much gratified with the result, but interested in the incontestable proof that Dodd's kidney pills certainly strike right at the seat of the diseases for which they are recommended, and are certain in their results.

In the Chicago schools, on National days, great pains are taken to interest and educate the pupils in a knowledge of patriotism. Essays, songs, recitations and tableaux serve the purpose most effectually. For instance, the following programme, one amongst many, may be quoted as it was given in Lake View school on Memorial Day:

"Declaration of States," by thirteen girls. "Our Government and the Republic," Idea, by Bessie, by Bessie Miller, Edna England, Lulu Karp, Pauline Kollman. "Duties and Responsibilities of American Citizens," by Herman Jordan, Ross Schmolh, Bettie Smith, Estlin Hanson.

"The Union and the Flag as its Symbol," by Helen McDonald, Leona Hein, Lusia Young. Song and recitation, "Our Adopted Citizens," by thirteen boys. Recitation, "Stand by the Flag," Lizzie Keiser.

They are not afraid to teach patriotism on the other side of the border.

MONT. McDONALD, the well known St. John barrister, was obliged to seek a change of climate for the cure of acute bronchitis. He took Hrwker's Tolu and was cured by two bottles. He considers it a remarkable remedy, and strongly recommends its use to all so afflicted.

ANDREW USHER'S SCOTCH WHISKIES are a blend of the oldest and finest Highland productions. Selected with the greatest care and attention.
