THE AMERICAN
$8.00 Typewriter.

This is a well-made, practical machine, writing capitals, small letters, figures, and punctuation marks (71 in all) on full width paper, just like a $100 instrument. It is the first of its kind ever offered at a popular price for which the above claim can be truthfully made. It is not a toy, but a typewriter built for and capable of REAL WORK. While not as rapid as the large machines sometimes become in expert hands, it is still at least as rapid as the pen, and has the advantage of such simplicity that it can be understood and mastered almost at a glance. We cordially commend it to helpful parents and teachers everywhere.

Writes capitals, small letters, figures and marks—71 in all.
Writes just like a $100 machine.
No Shift Keys. No Ribbon. Prints from the type direct.
Prints on flat surface.
Writing always in sight.
Corrections and insertions easily made.
Takes any width of paper or envelope up to 8½ inches.
Easy to understand—learned in 5 minutes
Weighs only four pounds—most portable.
Compact, takes up but little room.
Built solid and simple; can't get out of order.
Capital and lower case keyboard alike—easily mastered.
More "margin play" for the small letters which do most of the work.
Takes good letter-press copies.

Packed securely in handsome case and expressed to any address on receipt of price, $8.00, in registered letter, money order or certified check. We guarantee every machine, and are glad to answer all inquiries for further information as to this machine and also the "Yost."

A FAMOUS RACE HORSE.

HOW A MURDERER ESCAPED BY HIS ENDURANCE AND SPEED.

An Exciting Race Still Often Referred to by Old Timers—"Border Ruffian's" Great Deed and His Reward—Snatched from the Gallows.

In an eastern paper of recent date reference was made to the Border Ruffian, a famous old race horse, whose name many of the latter day generation of sporting men have probably never heard. Yet Ruffian was a wonderful animal and contested in some of the most notable turf events that have stirred the hearts and affected the purse of old-time sporting element of the west. His most famous race, and one which involved the largest purse ever ran for in the west, took place in Denver over 30 years ago. The race is still often referred to by old-timers who witnessed it. One morning early in May of 1860, relates the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, two men, astride of one horse, arrived in the then frontier settlement of Denver, from the old Salt Lake trail. Although it was not an unusual sight to see two men riding one horse, Mexican style, there was something about these particular men and the appearance of their horse that gave them an air of mystery, and the news of their arrival quickly spread from cabin to cabin. By the time the two strangers had reached the elephant corral, where they put up their horse, a goodly sized crowd of people were already there, anxious to form their acquaintance. The strangers were dressed in full suits of buckskin, and heavily armed; their horse, a bay, seemingly jaded and tired, was spiritless and hoof worn. His sides were covered with streaks of foam and alkali dirt, and his back was raw from the chafing of the heavy saddle. Altogether, the animal was in a pitiable sight, and the predictions were made that the next morning would find him dead in the stall.

"Give old Ruffian the best feed you have got," said one of the strangers, "for he deserves it. He has stood by us in a mighty hard ride and has saved our necks. If it had not been for him we would have been swung off by the Mormons long ago."

The two strangers were none other than Jim Harrison and Tom Hunt, the notorious Utah outlaws, and the horse was Border Ruffian, the famous Salt Lake race horse. For several years Ruffian had reigned the invincible king of the Mormon race track, and under his saddle had never been beaten either in long or short races. His name was familiar to everybody in Utah and the adjoining territories, and his victories furnished themes for many interesting stories. No amount of money could induce his owners to part with him. Hunt and Harrison, who were professional gamblers, had lost a good-sized fortune in betting against Ruffian in various races, and finally decided to steal the horse and take him to some new country and there make up what they had lost against him. Before they had completed their plans Hunt killed a prominent Mormon of Salt Lake, and, after a very short trial, was found guilty and sentenced to be hanged. A gallows was erected on the outskirts of the town, near the old overland road, and all preparations were made to swing him in due and impressive form. During the excitement attendant upon the preparations for the event and on the morning of the day on which Hunt was to hang Harrison entered the stable where Ruffian was kept and spirited him away. Mounted on another horse and leading Ruffian, Harrison rode to the gallows without being observed, and, slipping two six-shooters into Hunt's hands, told him to "hurry up," at the same time, acting on his own suggestion, he wheeled his horse and charged upon the crowd. Hunt was not a moment behind and the two, at a speed which defied pursuit, fled down the Weber canyon trail and were soon out of sight. Before they were out of range, however, the horse ridden by Harrison was struck by a bullet and shortly afterward had to be abandoned. It was then that Ruffian was compelled to carry the double load which he took into Denver. Night and day the infuriated Mormons pursued Harrison and Hunt, but were unable to overtake them, so great was the speed and endurance of the stolen horse. When fully 100 miles from Salt Lake the two desperadoes made their first stop for rest and food and on the morning of the tenth day they rode into Denver, a distance of 600 miles from Salt Lake.

An Echo True to Nature.

At Mme. Arrbelle's the conversation turned upon echoes, and a lady in the company declared that she knew of one that repeated a sound 9 or 10 times.

"Pooh! that is nothing," said the Marquis; "I have an echo that can beat yours into fits."

"Impossible!" said everybody in chorus.

"You can put it to the test if you like."

"Very well, we will step across to-morrow to hear for ourselves."

"Yes, come without fail," and so saying the Marquis took his departure, meditating a little scheme of his own. On reaching his mansion he sent for his lackey, Sancho by name.

"You are up to all sorts of tricks, old chap. Do you think you could manage to play the part of an echo?"

"Certainly, my lord; you have only to shout 'Ho! ho!' and I repeat the same."

"Very well; to-morrow afternoon you shall go and stand in that clump of trees behind the lake and repeat 30 times any call that you may hear, gradually lowering your voice; but mind—mum's the word!"

Next day his lordship's friends came trooping into the park. Sancho was at his post, pricking up his ears. "Now, ladies and gentlemen, your doubts will soon be dissipated," said the Marquis; "will you be the first to try the experiment, Madame?"

"No, thanks, Marquis, your voice is louder and more effective for the purpose than mine."

Whereupon the Marquis inflated his lungs and called out at the top of his voice:

"Are you there?"

To which the echo made answer: "Yes, my lord, I've been here a couple of hours?"—La Famille.

White Blood in Her.

A foreign diplomat, conversing with the Hawaiian queen on the subject of mixed races in Hawaii, said, "But your majesty surely has no white blood in your veins?" "Indeed I have white blood in my veins," said the queen; "my grandfather ate Captain Cook."—Exchange.

Deafness Caused by Catarrh.

Capt. S. F. Belyea, of Greenwich, King's Co., N. B., suffered from an aggravated form of catarrh which had in his case induced serious deafness, closed the nasal passages so that he could scarcely breath and caused him great pain and trouble. He tried many remedies, but all failed until he got Hawker's Catarrh Cure, three 25 cent packages of which effected a cure. "I can honestly say" says capt. Belyea "that I am practically well, and I take great pleasure in recommending Hawker's Catarrh Cure to those who may be suffering from this very troublesome disease."

RUSSIA'S CZAROWITZ.

AN HEIR TO A THRONE WHO OCCUPIES A PECULIAR POSITION.

The Young Man, Though Weak in Some Respects, is Inclined to Liberalism—The Widest Breach Between Him and His Father—His Predilections.

The widest breach between the Russian Czarowitz and his father is on the Jewish question. The young man does not believe in persecuting the Jews or in driving them from Russia. There are other points of difference between the opinions of the Czar and those of his son, but these are the main ones, and to a man of the Czar's fierce temper, which will not brook opposition, they are sufficient to cause him to look upon his son as a wilful, fractious boy, not fit to rule any people.

That Grand Duke Nicholas would be able to put his advanced ideas into force should he come into power to-morrow, there is small reason to believe. He has absorbed some liberal ideas from his tutors, but he is not in any way a forceful or a strong young man. He is not resourceful, has no special talent for affairs, and would be a weak figure in the hands of the strong body of strategists who now surround Alexander III. and largely shape his reactionary policy.

Take it all in all, the young heir to the Russian throne occupies a peculiar position. The heir of his father, he is yet distrusted by him. The Czar is not at the best of times a very amiable man, save toward his wife. Latterly he has been a victim of insomnia, and then there come reports that the hereditary taint of insanity, which has shown itself in the Romanoffs, has marked him in an open manner. Under these circumstances his conduct toward his son, in whom he places little faith, may be highly important in its results.

Those who have come into contact with the Czarowitz—and they are not numerous—all concur in the opinion that, while not over bright, he is fairly intelligent and very amiable.

This latter quality has made him popular with all parties in the Russian court, even including those who look upon him as a very weak figure indeed to support the weight of the Russian crown—as he may some day. He has a certain grace and fact that come to him from his clever Danish mother and not from his cross grained father. He is more of a scholar than most of the Russian men of rank are, but is both modest and simple of manner. Tutors, whom he has had from time to time, have reported of him that the amiability he shows in public is not assumed.

In the schoolroom he was the same. He always met his tutors half way in their efforts to improve him. He was never churlish, nor did he display any of the "spoiled child" qualities that might have been looked for in a young man of his position. Not especially quick to learn, he was willing and patient. It was from one of these tutors that the Grand Duke imbibed the ideas which made him German rather than French in his tastes and sympathies, contrary to what would have been the wishes of his father, had the latter known anything of the matter.

Still, the young man is fairly well versed in French literature as well as German, and, unlike his father, he is an admirer of Tolstoi and of the younger writers of the modern Russian period who are pushing to the front. He is said to care little for heavy reading of a political or historical character. He has a taste for poetry and fiction, and in this again he is like his mother, for Alexander III. has no liking for that sort of reading, or indeed for any other.

Newspaper literature is served on him sparingly. The Czar's press censors are a zealous lot, and must do something to earn their wages. When they come across an English newspaper, for instance, of an outspoken character they give it a queer overhauling before it goes to the future Czar. The result is that he knows only in a fragmentary way of a good deal that is going on in the world outside his father's palace.

If he could follow his own bent he would undoubtedly go about freely and learn something of the people whom he may be called upon to govern. But the fear that the anarchists will insist on taking shots at him with dynamite bombs prevents his doing any genteel slumming in St. Petersburg or Moscow.

There is one thing to be said of the young man that cannot be said of other knights of his age. His life has been clean. His name is unsmirched by scandal. He has lived quietly with his books and studies. His habits have been and are of the simplest. He is tenderly attached to his mother and if his affection for his rough bear of a father is less strong, he has at least given him respect and obedience while disagreeing with him on many points. He really wishes to improve the condition of the people of Russia and on no narrow lines. He is no apostle of war or bloodshed and no persecutor of race or religion.

Such a young man, with even moderate brains, might rule sensibly.

The marriage of this young man to the daughter of the Prince of Wales and his accession to the Russian throne before the next great European struggle, which statesmen say cannot long be delayed, would have an important effect upon the turn of events. His known and openly avowed friendship for Germany and its Emperor would lead him to treat the Triple Alliance neutrally, if not with downright open friendship, and would leave France isolated and almost alone in Continental Europe, while his connection by marriage to a daughter of the Prince of Wales would certainly tend to promote amity between Russia and England.

Berlin's Public Kitchens.

These popular establishments are described by George S. Layard in the Nineteenth Century. A public kitchen for the working classes was inaugurated in 1866 by a German woman, Han Morgenstein. She has established many of these kitchens, each one having a public dining room, comfortably warmed and furnished, and supplied with the daily papers. Each kitchen, supplying perhaps from 300 to 400 people with daily meals, is managed by a local committee, the whole scheme being under the control of a central council. All the paid cooks are on the premises by 6 in the morning, and the vegetables and meat have been brought in before them. Waste of any kind is strictly forbidden. A subscription of $3,250 was sufficient to start this scheme; the reserve fund set aside for providing new kitchens increases every year, while the council pays fair wages and is able to pension off its old servants. For a sum varying from three to six cents the Berlin workman can obtain a satisfactory meal at any of these restaurants. A dinner for four cents allows a basin of thick, substantial German soup, a plate of vegetables, and a plate of pudding, and a roll of bread in addition costs a little over one-fourth of a cent.

Success produces imitations. Genuine Pond's Extract is sold only in bottles, with landscape view on buff wrapper.
