SALLY DOWS,

An After War Romance of the South.

As if in obedience, Courtland closed his eyes. But even in his weak state he was conscious of the blood coming into his cheek at Sophy's relentless criticism of the man for whom he had just periled his life and position.

The medical practitioner of Redlands, he remembered, was conservative, old-fashioned and diplomatic. But his sympathies had been broadened by some army experiences, and Courtland trusted to some soldierly and frank exposition of the matter from him.

Dr. Maynard was first a healer, and, like Sophy, professionally cautious. The colonel had better not talk about it now. It was already two days old; the colonel had been nearly forty-eight hours in bed. It was a regrettable affair, but the natural climax of a long continued political and racial irritation—and not without great provocation!

Perhaps it was his very inability to grasp, in that exhausted state, the full comprehension of the doctor's meaning, perhaps because the physical numbness of brain was stronger than any mental excitement, but he dozed again until the doctor reappeared.

Courtland started slightly. Jack Dumont! That was the name of Sally Dows' cousin of whom Champney had spoken! He had resolutely put aside from his returning memory the hazy recollection of the young girl's voice—the last thing he had heard that night—and the mystery that seemed to surround it. But there was no delusion in this cousin—his rival, and that of the equally-deceived Champney.

"Yes. But of course you knew nothing of all that while you were off in the swamp there. Yet, by Jingo! it was Dumont's shooting Higbee that helped you to get off your nigger, a darned sight more than your killing the dogs."

He better than nigger driving. And that let you and Cato out, colonel. "And Dumont?" "Got clean away to Foxboro station, leaving another score on his side for the Reeds and Higbees to wipe out, as best they can. You no't'n men don't believe in these sort of things, colonel, but taken as a straight fight, Higbee's raiding, that stroke of Sally Dows' cousin was mighty fine!"

Courtland controlled himself with difficulty. The doctor had spoken truly. The hero of this miserable affair was her cousin—his rival. And to him—perhaps influenced by some pitying appeal of Miss Sally for the man she had deceived—Courtland owed his life. He instinctively drew a quick, sharp breath.

"Are you in pain?" "Not at all. When can I get up?" "Perhaps to-morrow." "And this arm?" "Better not use it for a week or two." He stopped and, glancing paternally at the younger man, added gravely, but kindly: "If you'll take my unprofessional advice, Col. Courtland, you'll let this matter simmer down. It won't hurt you and your affairs here that folks have had a taste of your quality, and the nigger a lesson that his fellows won't forget."

"I thank you," returned Courtland, coldly, "but I think I already understand my duty to the company I represent and the government I have served." "Possibly, colonel," said the doctor, "but you'll let an older man remind you and the governments that you can't change the habits or relations of two distinct races in a few years. Your friend, Miss Sally Dows, although not quite in my way of thinking, has never attempted that."

A woman had brought suit for damages against a man for colliding with her and throwing her down. Judge—Did he see you when he ran against you? Woman—Of course he didn't. He was looking the other way. Judge—But did you see him? Woman—Was looking right at him. Judge—Then why didn't you step aside and avoid the collision? Woman—I think I know the immunities that belong to my sex. Do you suppose I was going to step off the cross walk for a man?

Commendable.

All claims not consistent with the high character of Syrup of Figs are purposely avoided by the Cal. Fig Syrup Company. It acts gently on the kidneys, liver and bowels, cleansing the system effectually, but it is not a care-all and makes no pretension that every bottle will not substantiate.

"I hear that your next door neighbors have a new organ. Do you know how many steps it has?" "Only about three a day, and those are only for meals."

She thought her case hopeless, but Hawker's Nerve and Stomach Tonic restored her to health, hope and strength. She strongly recommends it to all who suffer as she did.

A Brockville Druggist's Case.

BROCKVILLE, April 24th.—The popular impression is that doctors and druggists seldom take their own medicine. This is no doubt true, but when a doctor takes ill he generally calls in one of his own profession, in whose skill he has every confidence, or when a druggist is in a similar situation, he often puts his faith in the preparations of some other chemist which he knows give good results.

Mr. Peter Lingley, Councilor, Peterborough, Queens Co., N. B., says:

"On the 21st inst.—Last winter I had a very severe attack of the Grip, which left me very feeble and reduced in flesh. I had no appetite, and was so nervous I could not sleep. I was under Doctors' treatment for months, but received no benefit. My friends thought I was 'gone' and got so low that they were expecting my death at any day. As a last resort they decided to try

The Telephone Company

P. E. ISLAND.

PARTIES using the Telephone would find talking much more satisfactory if they would observe the following rules:— 1st. Speak with the mouth about four inches from the transmitter. 2nd. Speak in a moderate tone of voice, not too loud and distinctly. 3rd. Place the telephone so as to cover the ear, just as if you wish to shut out all other sounds. Do not press too hard on the ear. It is possible to talk and be heard when standing back two or three feet from the transmitter, if you speak loud enough, but it is not a pleasant mode of conversation, is entirely unnecessary, and is a useless waste of wind and lungs, besides being very annoying to all within range of your voice.
