BUSINESS ENDURANCE.
Men of genius without endurance cannot succeed. Men who start in one kind of business may find it impossible to continue therein all their days. All wealth may demand a change. New and wilder fields of enterprise and success may be opened to them; new elements of character may be developed. Men may have a positive distaste for some pursuits, and success may demand a change. None of these cases fall within the general rule. Men who have rare talents, but if they are everything by turns, and nothing long, they must not expect to prosper. No form of business is free from vexations; each man knows the spot on which his own narrow chafes; but he cannot know how much his own neighbor suffers. It is said that a Yankee can splice a rope in many different ways; an English sailor knows but one method; but in that method he does his work well. Life is not long enough to allow any one to really master of but one pursuit.
The history of eminent men in all professions and callings proves this. The great statesman William Pitt was a great lawyer. His boyhood was marked only by uncommon industry; as a speaker he did not excel in early life. With great deliberation he selected the law as his profession, nor could he be deterred from his chosen pursuit. While a poor student, not the tempting prize of a clerk, he was appointed a Clerk of the Courts, then a large sum, gained with great difficulty for him by the zeal and influence of his father, he was appointed a great lawyer.
