Liquor Traffic Forcibly Condemned.

The following resolutions were adopted by the General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church of the United States at its last session at Waco, Texas. The resolutions forcibly present the traffic in its real and true aspect:—

1. That among the inalienable rights of man, enumerated in the Declaration of Independence, are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and since it is beyond controversy that the traffic in intoxicants as a beverage destroys life, liberty and happiness, it subverts personal liberty and inalienable rights, and ought, therefore, to be forever prohibited.
2. It being admitted that the said liquor traffic is evil and only evil in its tendency (and no right-thinking and candid man, be he saint or sinner, will deny the fact), to license such traffic, then, whether the license fee be high or low, must be wrong; it is, in fact, a crime and disgrace to the boasted civilization of the nineteenth century. To license it, is to make lawful that which God has made unlawful.
3. That the manufacture of, and the dealing in, or in any manner favoring such dealing, as also the use as a beverage, of intoxicating liquors, is inconsistent with the Christian character, and those who thus dishonor their Christian profession deserve, and should receive, Church discipline.
4. That no man can be indifferent to the misery, grief and want caused by said traffic without great sin, just as no man who witnesses approaching disaster to a community is guiltless if he could give, and fails to give, timely warning and relief.
5. That we, as a Church, stand now as heretofore squarely and unmistakably on this great question, and hereby pledge ourselves to vote for and to aid every enterprise that in any way looks to the overthrow of this accursed traffic, now licensed and protected by the laws of most of the States.—The Mid-Continent.

A Woman's Presence of Mind.

The death of a mother in Chicago was narrowly averted a few days ago by presence of mind and good luck. Mrs. J. Norman was doing some ironing, and attempted to replenish the fuel in her little oil stove while the wick was still alight. She allowed the oil to run over and it ignited. The flame reached to the ceiling, and Mrs. Norman seized a pail of water to quench them. This only tended to make matters worse. The blazing oil ran in streams about the floor and ignited Mrs. Norman's dress. She hastily rolled herself in a blanket and extinguished the blazing garment before she was severely burned. Little Clara Normat, who attempted to put out the fire, also had her clothes ignited. She seized her baby brother in her arms and was about to rush out with him. The flames had communicated to his clothes, and the two would have been burned to death had not Mrs. Norman wrapped them in the same blanket which saved her. She smothered the flames from the burning stove and then fell to the floor exhausted with her efforts. Fortunately, all three escaped with a few slight burns.

Temperance News and Notes.

Seventy-four counties of Missouri are without saloons.
Monroe County, Ill., has more saloon keepers than Sunday-school scholars.
The Northern Pacific Railroad has prohibited the sale of liquor on its property.
The Topeka Capital estimates that Kansas has saved not less than $12,000,000 since her prohibitory law went into effect.
Yale College has wisely decided to prohibit the use of alcoholic liquors of all kinds in the College Society Halls. It would be well if every other college in America should do the same.
The money spent for drinks in an American city of $200,000 inhabitants is put down at $25,000 per week the year round. That is $1,300,000 thrown away and worse, and seven-tenths of it comes from the day laborers.
Seven-year-old Willie McCornell, of San Francisco, found a bottle of whiskey and tasted the contents. He liked it and drank over half a pint. He became tipsy, then ill, and in a few hours died in great agony, in spite of the best efforts of a good doctor to save him.
There is a prominent lady in Philadelphia who has written for private circulation a little social tract, in which she takes the view that very little mischief would happen in the world that does happen if men would stay home evenings with their wives. Intemperance, crime, divorce, and even political corruption, she attributes to this cause.

A Burglar Who Captured Himself.

One year ago the house of L. S. Sessions, a few miles from Augusta, Ga., was robbed of some money and silver plate. The thief was discovered and almost captured, when he mysteriously disappeared in the darkness, and the most difficult search failed to trace him. The other day Mr. Sessions ordered a tree to be cut, as it gave evidence of rapid decay, and its proximity to his dwelling made it dangerous. When the tree fell, the skeleton of a man was found wedged in it, and near him the silverware and money that had been stolen from Sessions. The supposition is that the burglar in escaping climbed the tree and stepped in the hollow so as to elude discovery, but found it impossible to get out.

Little Gems.

He that is ignoble in small deeds cannot act nobly in great deeds.
You should forgive many things in others, but nothing in yourself.
Manners must adorn knowledge, and smooth its way through the world.
A man does harm to others by his actions, to himself by his thoughts.
The end of man is an action and not a thought; though it were the noblest.
Work and play are necessary to each other, but they should not be mixed.

Is not he imprudent who, seeing the tide making haste toward him apace, will sleep till the sea overwhelms him?

Thoughts in Brief.

Hold fast by the present! Every situation—nay, every moment—is one of infinite value, for it is the representative of a whole eternity.
A good habit for some people to cultivate is the habit of silence. Under some conditions a man can make more noise in the world by keeping his mouth shut than in any other way.
Gratitude is a virtue that has commonly monly profit annexed to it. And where is virtue that has not? But still the virtue is to be valued for itself, and not for the profit that attaches to it.
The high prize of life, the crowning fortune of a man, is to be borne to some pursuit which finds him in employment and happiness, whether it be to make baskets, or broadswords, or canals, or songs.
Bad luck is simply a man with his hands in his pockets and pipe in his mouth, looking on to see how it is coming out. Good luck is a man of pluck, with his sleeves rolled up and working to make it come out right.
We may teach rules of right conduct, and explain clearly their reasons and foundations, but unless we can stimulate the moral sense of a child or a man to voluntary exercise, we cannot hope to form or reform character.

In writing his memoirs, Gen. Grant recited many humorous stories, but before the manuscript was given to the printers the anecdotes were all cut out. "Some of them were very good, indeed," said Col. Grant the other day. "I have them at home, but they are not for publication. Most of them were too severe." That they would make interesting reading there can be no doubt, and if they ever see the light they will be assured an immense sale.

Grew a Beard After Death.

About thirteen years ago Hal Clayton, one of the best-known gamblers on the coast, died here of a fever. He was rich, and his remains were placed in a costly metallic casket, with a glass case, and consigned to a handsome tomb. His wife, who was frantic with grief, placed her diamonds on his shirt front. The stones were valued at $800. Fearful lest the gems would be taken from the vault, she placed a watch at the tomb, and it was maintained for many weeks. Clayton was a Southerner, and the body was disposed of after the Southern fashion, above ground.

Not long ago George Dobbs, who has the care of the cemetery, was possessed with a curiosity to visit Hal Clayton's tomb, and securing the keys of the vault took a look at the remains. He was astonished to find that Clayton's beard and moustache had grown under the glass case to such an extent that they reached below his knees. The beard was a rich brown color, extending in heavy masses over the body, and having a perfectly healthy appearance, as it might have had on a living man. The beard had been growing in this way for thirteen years.

Clayton had a romantic life. He was engaged to a handsome young girl in the South, and left her to seek his fortune. She became tired of his absence, and setting out to find him, drifted, homeless and friendless, from one camp to another. After years of this life she met her former lover, but was so changed by her wandering life that he refused to marry her. After his repudiation of his old sweetheart, he became sick, and when laying at death's door she came to his bedside and nursed him back to health. Filled with gratitude at her devotion, he renewed the affection of his youth and married her. She proved a devoted wife, and when he died she built, at a large expense, the vault where his remains now lie, and in which his beard has been growing all these years. Whether the diamonds are on his shirt front is not known, as the beard hides the body from the knees up.—Carson (Nev.) Special.

"What is your name?" asked a teacher of a boy. "My name's Jule," was the reply. Whereupon the teacher impressively said, "You should have said, 'Julius, sir.' And now, my lad," turning to another boy, "what is your name?" "Billious, sir."

An editorial in the Missionary Herald for June on "The Liquor Traffic with Africa," contains a table showing the exports of intoxicants from Boston to Africa for five years—1883-7—amounted to 3,500,000 gallons, valued at $1,165,824.
