BEDTIME STORIES

Black Pussy Goes Hunting

All hunting is one-sided fun. The hunted always on the run. —Old Mother Nature.

Black Pussy is a hunter. The love of hunting is born in him. He doesn't have to hunt. No, sir, Black Pussy doesn't have to hunt. In all his life Black Pussy never has been one half as hungry as Reddy Fox is most of the time through the winter. Black Pussy has all his good given him. He never has to even look for it, so there is no real reason why he should go hunting. But he does. It is because he thinks hunting is fun.

since he had caught a Mouse. Yes, they were getting smart. Black Pussy was getting disgusted. Hunting there wasn't fun any more.

The snow was quite deep over the ground. Jack Frost had formed a hard crust over it. It wasn't a very thick crust, but it was strong enough for Black Pussy to walk on without danger of breaking through. He decided to try a little hunting down on the Green Meadows, which were white instead of green now. He knew that many Mice live there all the year around. He had often hunted there in the summer and sometimes in the spring and fall. Once or twice he had been down in winter and he knew the Mice were still there.

Black Pussy followed the Mouse smell as best he could.

Black Pussy walked over the crust slowly and carefully. He reached a place where tops of old weeds were above the snow. Some of those tops still had seeds in them. Now Black Pussy was not only using his eyes, but also his nose. He smelled Mouse. Yes, sir, as he walked about among those weed tops he smelled Mouse. He knew just what it meant. Mice had been running about on the snow getting weeds from those weed tops. He found some seeds shaken out on the crust. If Mice had been out there, they would come out again. Black Pussy followed the Mouse smell as best he could. It led him to a certain weed top which had a large stalk coming up through the crust. Right at that stalk was an opening in the crust and the smell of Mouse was very strong there. Black Pussy knew just what it meant. He knew that Mice had been using that stalk to climb out on the crust to get at the seeds.

Black Pussy crouched down on the snow just an easy jump away from that hole. The Black Shadows had just begun to creep out from the Purple Hills. Black Pussy crouched down as close to the snow as he could in the midst of the Black Shadows. He looked like a Black Shadow himself, a little blacker than the others. He settled himself comfortably. He knew he might have to wait there a long time. A good hunter has patience. Black Pussy is a good hunter.

After a long time he saw that weed stalk begin to shake a little. He set his legs ready for a good spring. His eyes gleamed with excitement. He was sure a Mouse was climbing that stalk.

Opening lead—three 0 clubs. The average bridge player today plays much better than his position number did years ago. The chief reason for the improvement is that he is a much better bidder now than he used to be. And the reason he bids better is largely traceable to his use of the point count, a gadget not in popular use some years back. The point count tends to prevent certain errors of judgment in evaluating a hand which Joe Doakes might otherwise commit. Having learned how many points are necessary to make a game, how many points his partner's bids represent, and how many points he himself has, he has a pretty good idea of what to do in a given situation.

Peculiarly enough, the benefits of point count can be transferred in some hands to the play of the cards. East made a fine defensive play in the hand shown which succeeded in upsetting the three notrump contract, and his knowledge of point count was the basis for the play.

When dummy came down it was apparent to East that his partner must have a worthless hand. North had 14 points, East was looking at 13, and the odds were great that declarer had the remaining 13.

South won the club lead in his own hand and fired back a spade, playing the ten from dummy. East made the brilliant play of winning with the ace instead of the queen. He returned the king of hearts and continued with the queen, declarer ducking both. A third heart forced the ace and established East's remaining hearts.

Declarer, convinced that West had the queen of spades because of the earlier spade play, led another spade to dummy's jack, fully expecting this would produce the ninth trick. East produced the surprise spade queen, cashed two good hearts, and set the contract two tricks.

If East had taken the first spade lead with the queen South might easily have shifted his attention to diamonds, finessed the jack, and picked up four diamond tricks to make the contract.
