CELERY
CELERY

Why do we hear and see so much about "Paines' Celery Compound?" Because it is claimed to have a certain amount of celery in its composition, and why are we blowing so much about celery? Because we have the genuine article, and in order to introduce it even more thoroughly, we make the following liberal offer:— Celery per bbl $2.00 for 3 bbls $5.00 for 6 bbls $9.50—a plan for keeping celery sent with each order; also a sample sent on receipt of address and 5 cents in stamps. When ordering state if for winter keeping or present use, we ship to all the Maritime Provinces, and celery will be received by our customers in perfect condition for winter keeping.

We are also growers and shippers of cabbage, beets, carrots, parsnips, turnips, cauliflower, tomatoes, onions. Orders from unknown correspondents, will please accompany order with cash address.

THE NEWS.

At latest advices the British are holding their own at Mafeking and Kimberley. A battle is now in progress at Ladysmith. Previous to the battle the British General had the advantage of reconnoitering the enemy's forces from a balloon.

AN EMPHATIC DENIAL.

AFTER a delay of several days, during which it took pains—we presume—to ascertain the truth of its statement, The Patriot emphatically denied the report that Mr. D. P. Irving had been canvassing as an independent candidate. We desire this fact to be particularly noted by the electors of Belfast. Mr. Irving is not an "Independent candidate." He was nominated by a packed convention of the Government's partizans. He comes out as the champion of the Farquharson Administration. He is contesting the election with Mr. A. A. McLean who maintains that their violated promises, their political and administrative incapacity, and the heavy debt incurred, are reasons why the Government have forfeited the confidence of the people of this Province. Upon this issue the gauntlet has been taken up by Mr. Irving. Let the fight be a fair and manly one.

MR. TARTE'S POSITION.

SOME of the English newspapers comment upon the recent statement of Mr. Tarte to the representative of a Parisian newspaper:

"I suffer keenly from the sufferings of your country—of my country." These last words were uttered in a very low and impressive tone. "For after all," he continued, "we are still French in Canada. We have 2,000,000 people who only speak French. The country people round about Montreal do all their business in French; on a National holiday in the Province of Quebec there is not a house which is not decorated with the French flag. I have even seen, amid countless tricolors, two or three white flags, with the fleur de lis—relics." Mr. Tarte went on to say that the Province of Quebec was becoming more and more French. "French immigrants arrive every day, and when the English are not in a majority in a country—when they are not the masters—they go away."

It is rightly concluded that these sentiments belong rather to a resident of Paris than to a Privy Councillor of Canada. Yes, Mr. Tarte ought to have remained in Paris. But having returned to Canada, the question is, will he be dismissed from the government? We have high authority for holding it to be true that "no man can serve two masters." If France is Mr. Tarte's country, Mr. Tarte is not to be trusted as the servant of the Queen in a British nationality. Mr. Tarte's action in regard to the Canadian contingent may be cited as evidence of the truth of this conclusion.

THE CASE STATID.

An authority upon the Transvaal question writes to an English paper:

"What to the Boers appear an infringement of their liberty is simply a curtailment of their power over other people's liberties. They resent England's interference for the protection of a vast number of English people whom they would tax to such an extent as to practically free the Boers from all contributions to the maintenance of the State; to whom they would refuse the advantages they give to Dutch citizens; whom they would keep disarmed in the midst of a rough, prejudiced, and fully-armed master-nationality. It is astounding that people who are able to read and write can believe that such oppression of sixty thousand Englishmen by thirty thousand Boers could possibly continue."

One of the most sacred duties of the British Government is to protect its subjects in foreign lands. This being so, could it be expected that the Government of Great Britain would tolerate forever, in a protected state, which owed its independence to British magnanimity, that which would be objected to in an entirely independent nation? In response to a petition of the British Uitlanders in the Transvaal the British Government requested for them the rights of citizenship according to stipulations and convention, upon certain reasonable in definite conditions, and after haggling for a long time and making full preparations for war, Kruger issued his audacious ultimatum and invaded the British colonies in South Africa.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

—Concerning the policy of Germany on the Transvaal conflict, it is reported that a treaty exists with the British Government under which a free hand is given to Germany in Asia Minor on conditions that Great Britain will not be interfered with in regulating the future of the South African Republic.

—It is stated that King Menelik, of Abyssinia, contemplates paying a visit to England next year after his sojourn in Paris for the Exhibition is terminated. His chief object, it is said, is to tender in person his gratitude to Queen Victoria and her ministers for the territorial concessions near Lake Rudolph which Great Britain granted to Abyssinia.

—Speaking of the battle of Glencoe, a correspondent at Pietermaritzburg says:—By a curious irony of fate a large hill named Gladstone frowned over the scene where Majuba was more than eclipsed and avenged. The event recalls certain remarks made to me some four weeks ago, when the General forecasted the middle of October as the most probable date of hostilities. "With our splendid artillery," he said, "if our troops are properly handled only victory is possible." The Irishmen at Maritzburg are proud of the valor of their countrymen and purpose to present them with an address on their return from the front.

Kimberley.

Kimberley is described as a city with fine buildings, spacious streets and all the accessories of a stable and prosperous community. When the war broke out the population was probably not less than that of St. John, New Brunswick, while in wealth and the splendor that wealth buys it is far ahead of most Canadian cities of the same population. Kimberley would be worth capturing, the more so, as the St. John Sun remarks, the Orange Free State has already annexed it by proclamation. But it is easier to annex a country by proclamation than to reduce the title into possession, and the people of Kimberley with their visitor, Hon Cecil Rhodes, are not disposed to surrender. On the contrary they appear to be offering a fatal entertainment to their alleged masters outside by occasional sorties. The male population of Kimberley comprises a considerable corps, and the garrison is apparently equal to the investing force.
