

Discuss New Species Of Trout For Island Streams

The possibility of introducing a new species of trout to P.E.I. streams was revealed at last night's meeting of the Prince County Fish and Game Association held in the Town Hall, Kensington, president Fred Semple presiding.

This new species of game fish, known as the brown trout, is being investigated by two members of the provincial fish and game executive and it is understood this trout has won favor in other provinces of Canada. It was also revealed that amendments to the present trout regulations, in which the six-inch size limit and the ten-pound daily bag limit would be abolished, may be put into effect by the opening of the trout season. Fishermen, however, will still be restricted to 20 fish per day.

It was announced that there is a strong possibility that the season on migratory birds will be lengthened this fall and the meeting went on record as favoring the extension be added to the end of the present season rather than at the beginning.

The results of a brief presented to the Department of Industry and Natural Resources by the provincial executive disclosed that the department is in favor of appointing extra game wardens for the province and intimated that two additional wardens may be appointed this year. This was just one of the various suggestions put forth in the brief.

A report was given on plans that are being made for the sportsmen's exhibit to be held during Old Home Week at the Provincial Exhibition and concerns expressed regarding damage to the trout population by blue winged heron, gulls and kingfishers. A discussion was also held concerning ways and means of increasing membership.

Sport Echoes From Prince County

Seldmon has a sports incident occasioned so much talk, and created so many headlines as the Campbell - Richard controversy. Montreal naturally expected to find Montreal lined up solidly behind their idol, and Boston backing the league president. It was significant, however, that the heads of all the four other teams also defended Mr. Campbell's action. These men are closely in touch with the hockey situation. There is no reason why they should not be neutral. You might argue that they would naturally be reluctant to go against the head of the league, but they could, at least, have been non-committal. But they were apparently quite pronounced in their opinions that the league proxy had done the right thing.

We were really surprised to pick urban issue of the Montreal Daily Star, and read eleven letters appearing in their "Forum" regarding the Richard incident. That, we were surprised at the comment of the letters. Of the eleven, ten defended Mr. Campbell's action, and one sided with the "Rocket". If we remember correctly, two of the ten took Campbell to task for attendance at the rink that fateful evening, but all ten were quite emphatic in their beliefs that Richard, great hockey player as he is, had it coming.

Let's Talk It Over

We pay three kinds of taxes—the direct tax—the one that hurts the most—where we have no choice whatever, but must obey the peremptory summons: "Please remit." We're not sure whether they bother to put "please" or not, but if they do, it's merely a polite convention. Reading between the lines, you gather the idea that "remit, or else" is a truer meaning of whatever phraseology they use.

Then there are the indirect taxes, such as the sales tax, amusement tax, etc. You can control your contributions to a certain limited extent in this field by keeping your fist closed tight when the spending urge becomes rampant. This control is largely non-existent, however, because the indirect tax does not annoy people like the direct tax. The indirect tax is sugar-coated and administered almost painlessly. The direct tax strides up to you like a menacing giant and bludgeons you over the head. The indirect tax slips up behind you, pats you on the back, and bites you playfully on the nape of the neck.

The third tax is controlled absolutely by the taxpayer. He pays or does not pay as he wishes. It is perhaps a pretty fair measure of "man's humanity to man" to turn upside down an already unenviable phrase. We refer to the tax which charity organizations take from us. It has many forms such as special drives, tag days, etc. As IQ is a measurement of one's intelligence, a new quotient might be created and called GQ, generosity quotient. One way to measure it would be to place together, for the purposes of comparison, our total income and our yearly contribution to these charity demands on our purse.
