

SIR JOHN MACDONALD The Funeral Arrangements. FLORAL AND OTHER TRIBUTES Who Will Be Premier?

OTTAWA, June 8.—The Liberal-Conservative members of the House of Commons who will wear badges of mourning for thirty days, will take charge of Sir John A. Macdonald's body to-morrow morning, and keep watch in relays of four, an hour and a half each turn until the time of the funeral on Wednesday.

The programme of arrangements for the funeral service is about completed. It is not yet known who all the pall-bearers will be, but probably members of the cabinet will perform this duty. According to the programme, the funeral procession will be led by a squad of dominion police, followed by the Dragon Guards, eight abreast, the officiating clergy, undertakers, twelve pall-bearers, six bearers (dominion police), followed by hearse, mourners, government and staff, senior officers of the troops, senior naval officers, governors of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba in the above order, with those of other provinces if present; members of the cabinet, general officers of the army, not in command, senators, members of the House of Commons and press gallery, provincial executive councils, legislative assembly, foreign consuls, deputy ministers, various societies, civic bodies, political clubs and deputations.

Besides the floral tributes from the Marquis of Lorne and Princess Louise, and the others already referred to in THE EXAMINER, tributes have been sent in by the corporation of Ottawa, the Senate, the Northwest delegates, Hon. Mr. Costigan, the Conservatives of Ontario, the Conservatives of the Maritime Provinces and Quebec, Senate officials, the several departments, and the pages. Rudwick McDonald of Halifax sent a large floral urn of heather and shamrock, maple, fleur de lis, roses &c., also a pot of Scotch heather and peat for Sir John Macdonald's resting place. L. DeForest, president of the junior Liberal Conservative Club of St. John, telegraphed J. D. Hazen, M. P., to procure a floral offering for the association. This wreath will be in the form of an anchor. A message of condolence has been received by Hon. Mr. Chapleau from the Count de Paris.

Sir Hector Langevin, on rising to move that the honor of a public funeral be given to the Premier, said that under the stress of feeling he could not trust himself to find words, and had written what he proposed to say. As the oldest privy councillor in the House it had fallen to his lot to announce that his old chief and comrade was no more. After an illness of two weeks death had put an end to his career. To tell you my feelings under this bereavement—here Sir Hector broke down and for some time was unable to proceed. Resuming, he expressed the opinion that Canada had lost her greatest statesman, and one who would have been eminent in any country. Her Majesty had never a more faithful servant. The late Premier had put his whole soul into the work of uniting the provinces, knowing that the nation so formed would be the right arm of the empire. His love for Canada was equal to his love for the empire. The future historian might not agree that Sir John Macdonald's policy was always right, but he would say that he was Canada's greatest man and would tell how, after fifty years' labor, he died in the midst of his official duties, not having had a day's rest until he was on his death bed. He (Sir Hector) had spent half his lifetime by the side of his late chief and would like to speak of him in his personal relations. He was proceeding to do so when he broke down altogether and was forced to take his seat.

Mr. Laurier said that he fully appreciated the deep grief of the Premier's friend and colleague. The emotion that choked his utterance was more eloquent than any words could be. "We," he said, "who did not believe in his policy, nor always approved of his methods, feel that the loss was more than a personal calamity. It was a national loss, for the man who was dead was Canada's foremost statesman." Mr. Laurier spoke of the premier's unceasing activity, and told how that some months ago everybody but the premier's own buoyant self was afraid that the angel of death was near. Later, there came a night when the House in the midst of an angry discussion had learned that the angel of death was indeed at hand, and the voice of strife was instantly hushed into calm. And yet it was almost impossible to convince the unwilling mind that in the chair now empty, he who had been in this house forty years would sit no more, that the voice so often heard here was stilled for ever. It was almost impossible to think of this country going on its way without him. It seemed that one of the institutions of the land had broken down. Speaking of the verdict of history, Mr. Laurier said that already it was agreed that in the act of governing men Sir John Macdonald was gifted as few men have ever been. He would have shone on any theatre of affairs; the more, the larger the theatre. His power to unite conflicting elements in the nation was almost unprecedented. He maintained the confidence and ardent devotion of all the elements of his party. The record of his life is the history of a country which had grown from a few scattered provinces with no common interest, into the country as it is now. We, said Mr. Laurier, did not agree with him in his last campaign. He had imputed to his opponents motives which in my heart I know did not exist. To-day these things might be forgotten, and all would acknowledge his great gifts and qualities. Mr. Laurier spoke further of the late Premier's character, attributing to him above all the far-reaching vision which enabled him to judge of the future of national events. The career of Sir John Macdonald had been a fortunate one. He had met few reverses, and his times of adversity were short. He loved power and did not disguise the fact. Power was given to him. His ambitions for himself and his country were gratified. He often said that he wished to die like Lord Chatham in the midst of his labors, and this also was granted him. The great sadness of death was the form of separation. The dead needed not our sympathy, but it should go out to those who were left, and especially to the brave and noble woman who had watched by his side. After referring to the older statesmen lately passed away and especially to Chief Justice Dorian, Mr. Laurier, in closing his address, said it might well happen that at such a time we lose heart lest the institutions of the land be placed in danger, but even in the hour of grief it should not be forgotten that though our great men, Canada shall live on.

The work of cabinet making is going briskly on among members of both parties. It is now generally supposed that Lord Stanley will not send for a new adviser until after the funeral. It is doubtful if he has yet made up his mind as to whom he will entrust with the duty of leading the coming ministry. It is certain that the Liberal-Conservatives in the House have not made any choice, nor is it probable that they could easily do so if it were left to them. A large number desire the minister of justice; many would like to see Sir Charles Tupper called to the leadership, some would be satisfied with the choice of Mr. Abbott as leader for the time. It is recognized that the task before the coming party leader and the party itself is no light one, and that on matters of organization some personal preferences must give way to the general good. There is no sign of weakening of the party allegiance, but on the contrary, the general feeling is that now is the time for united and aggressive action, not only for the emergency, but with the view of making great gains in the coming bye elections.

MONTREAL, June 8.—The Star publishes the following cable from London: "The death of Sir John Macdonald is the subject of lengthy memoirs in all the papers of the metropolis and also in many journals in the principal cities of England, Ireland and Scotland this morning. His life's work is generally eulogized as that of the first colonial statesman with a world-wide reputation. The Times in the course of a long editorial, says: 'With a majority of thirty in a parliament only three months old, the national policy, with its check to the absorption of the Dominion of Canada into the United States, is safe for the present; but from the death of the Premier, Sir John Macdonald, must date a new period of doubt and danger, during which Sir John's successors must depend upon the intrinsic worth of the laws he bequeathed without the magic aid of his great personality.'"

The sad news of the death of Sir John Macdonald was communicated by wire to Sir Charles Tupper at Vienna yesterday. The High Commissioner still remains in the Austro-Hungarian capital, and is accompanied by his wife. The postal congress to which Sir Charles is a delegate has yet to discuss several important matters upon which Canada's representative has received instructions, though he is awaiting further instructions on other important matters from the Canadian Government at Ottawa. There is no sign as yet of his changing his plans, though it is well known that he is in constant communication with friends in Canada.

The London papers seem to regard Sir John Thompson as the most likely successor to Sir John Macdonald in the premiership of the Dominion, though it is well known by the Minister of Justice's friends here that he would much prefer a quieter life, it being no secret that his ambition is to return to the bench as one of the Supreme Court judges. Sir Charles Tupper's selection as Prime Minister would please the United and extreme federation party here, but would greatly displease some city circles, principally owing to his recent action in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway.

HALIFAX, June 8.—Touching reference was made to the death of Sir John A. Macdonald in many of the city pulpits on Sunday. His Grace Archbishop O'Brien, Rev. D. M. Gordon, Rev. Dr. Partridge, Rev. Thos. Forbes, Rev. Jas. Simmonds and others, were amongst those who alluded to the great loss sustained by the nation in the death of her most gifted son. Archbishop O'Brien said: "The loss of Canada by Sir John Macdonald is very great. He was a man fitted for the occasion in which he lived. He was able to see and had a mind to grasp the possibilities of the country, and faith enough in her people to undertake the works necessary to ensure the glorious future of Canada. This will be more fully realized as the years go on. We cannot now see the full effects of his work, for it is only in the early stage of development; but future generations will appreciate what he has accomplished. Had he been a man of less force and foresight and less abiding faith in the resources of Canada, he would never have undertaken those great public works, which while they involved the country to a certain extent in debt, till it were absolutely necessary to our development and are therefore to be looked upon as an investment rather than as a burdensome public charge. Referring to the secret of Sir John's success as a leader, the archbishop said he did not, like some, think that it was solely in his tact and genial disposition, which no doubt were factors in that success, but was rather to be attributed to the fact that first and before all, he was a Canadian in his views, his policy and his aspirations. No man and no party who were not in touch with the national aspiration of the people could ever win their confidence, or successful carry on the government of the country."

ST. JOHN, N. B., June 8.—Many of the city clergymen referred to the death of the premier in the course of their sermons on Sunday. Rev. L. G. McNeill, of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, spoke as follows: "The flag that hangs at half-mast to-day all over the Dominion announces the death of a man whose name has been a household word in Canada for half a century. Not only in Canada, but undoubtedly he has been the most prominent figure and the foremost statesman in the Queen's Colonial Empire. His greatest opponents are prepared to admit his pre-eminence in ability over his contemporaries of every party. To write his biography would be to write the history of Canada during the past half a century. He has never been accused of making his country's service the stepping stone to personal riches. With every opportunity to grow wealthy, report says he did not die rich; and if he loved power it was but the goal for which his abilities fitted him and to which the suffrages of the people again and again lifted him."

The whole front of Macaulay Bros. and Co.'s establishment is draped in black and white as a tribute of respect to the memory of the dead premier. One of the windows in Daniel and Robertson's dry goods establishment on Charlotte St. is handsomely draped in black to-day. In the centre is a bust of Sir John.

MONTREAL, June 8.—At a meeting of the City Council this evening a resolution of condolence with Lady Macdonald was unanimously passed.

KINGSTON, Ont., June 8.—"Can you tell me where Sir John Macdonald's family plot is?" was the question addressed by a News reporter to a comely woman whom he found leaning on her elbows, with a watering pot beside her, in Catarqui cemetery a few evenings ago. She kindly pointed it out a little way off, intimating that she herself had only known within the past few days that the plot belonged to the Premier. The reporter found a large lot, surrounded by an iron fence, facing and sloping towards the south. In the centre is a plain Scotch granite shaft on a limestone base on which the single word "Macdonald" stands out in relief. There is no other inscription whatever on the stone. To the left are five mounds, none of them, however, marked by headstones, representing apparently the grave of Sir John's father, another maiden sister, first wife and child, who died in infancy many years ago. On the other side is a grave marked by a modest stone which announces that there is the last resting place of Margaret Macdonald, wife of Rev. Professor Williamson, who died in 1876. As it is well known she was a sister of the Premier. As the reporter wended his way from the cemetery he reflected that no more beautiful or appropriate spot could be chosen as the last resting place of the beloved chief. At your feet lies the beautiful little valley of the Catarqui with its velvety fields and peaceful farm houses; in front is the blue Ontario. To the left the spires of Kingston, Sir John's much beloved home, pierce the air. All around is a typical picture of Canadian life, like the "Old Man" knew so well and spent himself to serve.

Always to the Front.

A. G. Laird, son of Hon. David Laird, of the Charlottetown Patriot, who graduated at Dalhousie in 1889, with first rank honors in classics and the Governor-General's gold medal, has been appointed to a lectureship in Greek at Stanford University, in California, at a salary of $1,200. This university, founded by Senator Stanford, will open its first session this autumn. The annual income of the university, it is expected, will reach $1,000,000, interest on an endowment of $25,000,000, given by the founder. Mr. Laird's appointment is for one year. He has full control of the Greek department, and there is little doubt that he will acquire himself so well that when a permanent professor is appointed, the bright Dalhousian will be the man for the place. After graduating at Dalhousie, Mr. Laird was awarded a fellowship at Cornell of the value of $400. His career at this seat of learning was so satisfactory to his professors that the fellowship was renewed for a second year—a very rare occurrence at that university. It is understood that his thesis has been accepted and that he will receive his degree of Ph. D. at the commencement of the exercises this month.

J. C. Shaw, who during the last two sessions was tutor in classics at Dalhousie College has been awarded a Shattuck scholarship of $300 in the graduate school at Harvard. Mr. Shaw graduated at Dalhousie in 1887, with first rank honors in classics, winning the Governor-General's gold medal. F. J. McLeod, who graduated at Dalhousie in 1890, and has since spent one year at Harvard, and will graduate there this month, also won one of the above scholarships. Both these gentlemen will take a post graduate course at Harvard.

J. W. Brehaut, who graduated last session with first rank honors in classics, has been awarded a Price Greenleaf stipend to the amount of $250 at Harvard.

Several other Dalhousie graduates have probably also received scholarships at Harvard, though the Herald has, as yet, received no definite information.
