ELLEN'S DIARY

Each Season, As Each Day Hath Its Charms

The greens of woodland and field were brighter this morning, having been washed, prettied, by the magic of the night-showers. How happily they danced on the roof in the dimness — the Spring-rain, so unlike, it came to mind the mournful ones of the Fall. James hearing, stirred on his pillow beside us and murmured drowsily, "This is what the pastures need, and the meadows. A bit of heat now, and the grass will grow!" And the star in a lawn — tree to the east, which has been our company through those nights of our wakefulness when we were nursing a misery of body, or had for the moment dropped some stultic of our dreams, was missing. But there was music instead in the patter of the raindrops on the quiet roof above.

"We mustn't sleep in too late, Ellen" James said "there's so much we can be doing these days."

"We lost them today — our farmers — to those barns which housed the overflow of stock through the winter. There a spring-cleaning gave warrant of increase from those fields that gave too as at Alderlea climb gently a rise of the millstream valley. Better pasture, more grain to keep increased herds and flocks — so the cycle of the farming continues."

Today heralding a legion of blossoms of wildings along the country-side, the wide pear of James' father's planting in years now long gone, invited wayfarer bees to come and hold carnival in its branches. And now far from it in the lawn — border the children found in treasure a first tulip unfolding its striking, petals of scarlet and gold.

"Let's go and visit September Island" Granddaughter suggested to Mack this afternoon, after classes.

"September Island?" We queried. "Yes," she nodded. "We found it — Gage and Mack and I — among the alders not far from the spring in the field across the creek, when the men were working at the harvest close by. It was in that month, she explained, 'so Mack named it, 'September Island' you see. We built bridges to it — it's in the millstream . . . and made" she chuckled "the loveliest house! Let's go now, and see if the freshets have washed every thing away. If they have" she said to him, "we'll still have our island to fix up again!"

And, "It's a lovely time of year!" a little song sparrow sang in the United Church W.A. & W.M.S. Being Integrated, Not United

By MARY BURKE
Canadian Press Staff Writer
TORONTO (CP) — The women of the United Church of Canada are anticipating a change in their organization with announcement by the general council of an approved new federation set-up that will broaden women's part in the church.

"Many women of the church are bewildered and concerned about the proposed integration of the Women's Missionary Society and the Woman's Association," says Miss Ann Ward, general secretary, dominion board, WMS.

She explains that it will not be an amalgamation of the two groups. "It really is a movement in which members of the two organizations will find a new place."

This united women's organization will seek to preserve within the church all of that is value in the present women's organizations. The aim is to enlist all women of the United Church for the total mission of the church.

PERILANET VALDES
The study of the mission of the church, direct responsibility in the recruiting, appointing and maintaining of missionary personnel of the church, Miss Ward said are the WMS values to be conserved.

Miss Beatrice Wilson, secretary dominion council, W.A. says "the personal interest in local congregations and the needs of the people of the community are values to be conserved in the W.A."

Miss Wilson said the idea of federation has already caught fire and has been adopted by a number of larger churches. A committee of the general council now is studying the proposed set-up.

To get the project underway, women can begin now by getting to know each other and start to work together doing some of the things common to both organizations.

One of the interesting aspects of the new set-up is that the W.A. and WMS will be a part of the boards of the church, whereas under the existing system they are not.

Secretary To N. W. T. Council Has Wardrobe Problems

By CAROLYN WILLET
Canadian Press Staff Writer
OTTAWA (CP) — Just what does the well-dressed stenographer wear to work at Frobiher Bay — sealskin trousers and a fur-lined parka?

Phyllis Dolan had cause to wonder as she packed for a week-long visit to the Arctic for work in the community on the southeast shore of Baffin Island.

But she was not thinking in terms of sealskin and fur. It was a question of being chic but not chilly on her first visit to the Arctic.

Trim, dark-eyed Mrs. Dolan left Sunday to attend the semi-annual meeting of the Northwest Territories Council at Frobiher Bay.

FIRST PLANE TRIP
She attended two winter council meetings in Ottawa during her two years on the council's secretariat here.

"I'll be glad to see a part of the country I've been doing a lot of typing about," Mrs. Dolan said in an interview.

She said she as a "little leery" about her first plane ride — a non-stop flight from Ottawa to the eastern Arctic's fast-growing Frobiher Bay community.

But deciding what to wear to work in a spot 1,300 air miles north of Ottawa had this young woman in a quandary.

She tried to select a northern spring wardrobe from southern winter and spring apparel, keeping in mind that at this time of year the Frobiher Bay climate is unpredictable.

SLACKS IF NECESSARY
Council secretary R. A. Bishop protested he was no expert when it came to suggestions for feminine wear in the Arctic. The men of the party were expected to be comfortable in suits, topcoats and rubber galoshes, with a sweater or heavy underwear. But where does that leave the ladies?

Last summer, for instance, women at the council meeting at Aklavik wore slacks to work during their stay in the community for the month of the Mackenzie River.

Mrs. Dolan wasn't keen about wearing slacks to work, even if her office did move up beyond the treeline. But she took slacks — just in case. And she packed a couple of suits, sweaters and blouses, a well-lined coat and rubber galoshes.

One thing was certain however. North or south, it's spring, and long winter woolies stay home.

BURTON W. I.

LET'S EAT

Now Dieters Can Have Pie And Eat It, Too!

By IDA BAILEY ALLEN
"Madame, it has arrived!" exclaimed the Chef. "The wonderful crisp, nutty pie pastry we originated which contains rolled oats. Here it is in this fine Institution's magazine, featured for use in hotels and restaurants."

"And at just the right time, Chef," I said. "Many people have been advised by their doctors to go on a low fat diet. As a result, they feel they must give up pie and other foods they like."

NOT NECESSARY
"Except in drastic cases this is usually not necessary. Instead, without sacrificing a thing pleasure, cut down a little on the use of all types of fat."

"For instance, pie pastry made partly with quick rolled oats, calls for 1/4 less fat than usual because the rolled oats add flakiness."

Roller Oats Pie - Pastry (Low Fat): Sift together 1 c. already-sifted enriched flour and 1/2 tsp. salt. Add 1-3 c. shortening. Chop in with a pastry blender. Add 1/2 c. uncooked quick rolled oats and 3 tsp. water. Form into a ball. Chill 5 min.

Roll out as usual and use as desired. Raspberry Turnovers: Make oatmeal pie pastry, but add 2 tsp sugar before sifting the flour, and 1/4 tsp. vanilla extract with the water. Turn onto a floured surface. Knead 5 strokes, or until it holds together.

Divide in 12 parts. Roll each to form a 4" circle. Shape with cutter.

Place 1 tsp. raspberry jam on each. Fold over. Press the edges together and then prick twice with a fork.

Place on a cookie sheet. Bake 12-15 min. in a hot oven, 400 degrees F., or until the pastry is delicately browned.

Tomorrow's Dinner: Perfection salad-on-lettuce; broiled shad platter; Parslled potatoes; carrot rounds; raspberry-filled turnovers coffee, tea, milk.

All measurements are level; recipes proportioned to serve 4 to 6.

Broiled Shad Platter: Order a 3 lb. shad cleaned and boned. Wash, dry and season inside with 1/2 tsp. salt, 1 tsp. monosodium glutamate and 1/4 tsp. pepper.

Cover a large cookie sheet with heavy-duty aluminum foil; build foil up over the edges, about 1". Brush with oil.

On it, lay the shad, open with flesh-side up. Brush with 1 tsp. each oil and lemon juice.

Bake 25 min. in a moderate oven, 375-400 degrees F., or until browned and slightly flaky, or broil, skin-side up, for 5 min. 4" from the source of heat.

Then turn with a pancake turner and finish broiling.

To serve, slide onto a heated platter. Surround with baked slices of tomato and quartered parried potatoes. Garnish with lemon wedges.

Sunday Dinner: Asparagus - onion toast; broiled chicken with mushrooms; flaky rice; spinach with onion rings; tossed lettuce-radish salad; ice cream slices with butterscotch sauce; coffee, tea or milk.

Spinach with Onion Rings: Prepare 2 lbs. fresh or 2 (10 oz.) pkgs frozen spinach, as usual.

Season with 1 tsp. salt, 1/2 tsp. pepper and 1/2 tsp. sugar. Stir in
