BARGAIN CORNER

SHIELDED BY PROVIDENCE.

Two Missiles That Met in the Air and Fell Harmless to the Ground.

A half dozen or so men were sitting out in front of an up-town hotel the other evening telling stories.

"When I was 21," said a tall man, evidently from a southern state, "I had an ungovernable temper, and a half-brother three years older than myself. We were both church members, but that didn't seem to bring us any closer together, for he was a Methodist and I was a Baptist. You may have observed," he threw in as a decoration to the story, "that Christian charity and brotherly love don't always thrive on denominational feed. However, as I was saying, we were of different denominations, and we got along fairly well together until we began arguing on our respective faiths. Then we got hot, and I always lost my temper. I may say, that he did very nearly the same, but he wasn't quite as bad as I was in that regard.

"One day we were out hunting with only one gun, a squirrel rifle, between us, and I had the gun. I may add here that we lived on a farm, and a one-gun hunting party was not at all unusual. We had sat down on a rock near the edge of a stream to rest, and in some way I slipped and went into the water. It made me mad to begin with, and when he began chaffing me and telling me that a Baptist ought to be used to a little thing like that, I got ten times worse, and hit him a lick in the face. He ran off a few yards and picked up a boulder about as big as your double fist, while I made a grab for the gun, which I had set up against a willow under the bank.

"Of course, we did not know what we were doing by this time; only I remember telling him if he raised his hand to throw the stone I'd shoot him. He was nervy, though, and I hadn't more than got the words out of my mouth than he let the boulder come at me, and, true to my word, I banged away at him. We weren't forty feet apart, and it was a stand-off between the boulder and the bullet as to which was the more dangerous, but Providence, I reckon, was watching over us, for as I fired the boulder flew into a dozen pieces, and both of us were left standing looking at each other in a dazed, helpless kind of way. Then, still not understanding what had happened, but realizing how nearly our tempers had brought us to bloodshed, we rushed into each other's arms and began crying over each other.

"When we had got over the excitement and collected our wits sufficiently to make an investigation, we discovered that by the merest chance—by Providential interference, I mean—my bullet and his boulder had met in their flight and nullified each other. On one piece of the broken stone we found the blue mark of the bullet, and in another place we found the battered bullet. He took the bullet and I took the piece of marked stone, and we have kept them to this day as sacred souvenirs, and as very potent reminders never to discuss our respective beliefs. I'm just as strong a Baptist as ever, and he is equally a Methodist, but we both beifeve that greater than either Baptist or Methodist is the Providence that watches over us all."—Washington Star.

Be Honest.

You cannot afford not to be honest. The great necessity of your nature is not that you should be rich or loaded down with empty and doubtful honors, but that you should be a man. And to be a man means to be pure, honest, upright, generous, and everything the Creator designed you should be. A man cannot afford to be dishonest, for the moment he commences to be so, that moment he ceases to be a man. The moment you declare with all your heart and soul your intention to be honest, that moment God comes to your aid and assistance.

Things Were Going to Turn.

In front of a Dakota sod cabin sat a man about 50 years old, who was ragged and forlorn and hungry looking. A few rods away lay the dead body of a mule, and beyond that was a wagon with a broken wheel. There was no smoke coming out of the cabin chimney, no fowls or live stock about, and no other human being to be seen.

"Well," queried the man as I looked about, "things look sorter lonesome, eh?"

"Indeed they do, sir. What's been the matter with you?"

"Billyus fever."

"Where is the wife?"

"Inside the house with the same thing."

"And the children?"

"Out thar' behind the haystack shakin' with the ager."

"I see you've lost your mule."

"Died two days ago, sir. Can't rightly say what ailed him, but he's gone."

"I suppose you are dead broke on top of all?" I queried.

"Haven't got a red cent, sir, and nuthin' but cornmeal in the house," he replied.

"Well, I don't blame you for feeling blue over the situation."

"Who's a feelin' blue?"

"Why, I expect you are."

"Then you make a big mistake, stranger. Things did look a little blue last week, but three days ago I had this 'ere farm cut up into 2,000 town lots and arranged with a crittur to boom it, and I'm feelin' like a steer in a cornfield. Two thousand lots at $100 apiece, six railroads to cross yere, three big car works a-comin', schools, churches, factories, parks, hotels—why, durn my hide, but I jist sot yere calkerlatin' on startin' five banks and foundin' two or three orphans' asylums with my money!"

"Then I can't aid you?"

"Jist a pipe o' terbacker and a nip of whiskey, stranger, and you tell everybody down the road thet ole Bill Johnson has founded the town o' Golden City and is goin' to plant gold watches fur mile posts all over the state. Feelin' blue? Waal, I should raythor gurgle to observe that he has to keep hold of the grass to prevent his flyin' away fur joy and exultashun!"

A Hopeful View.

We should have early a hopeful view of life and a high aim in life, and stick to that in all life's experiences. We should be engaged only in honorable callings; be governed in all matters by right principle; cherish deep sympathies; develop moral strength and keep a clean record. Above all we need the very best of spiritual influences. We need the help and grace of God. We need the Spirit of Him whom God has highly exalted and given the name which is above every name. What power there is in the name of Jesus! What glory crowns it! In its saving effulgence a sinner's name may come to be a new name, a name which no one knows but he that receives it—the name of the new life, the name written in the Book of Life, the name sealed on the forehead as a mark of glory.

Natural Oddity.

In one of the Canary islands there is a tree of the laurel family that rains down occasionally in the early evening quite a copious shower of water drops from its tufted foliage. This water often collects at the foot of the tree, and forms a kind of pond, from which the inhabitants of the neighborhood can supply themselves with a drinking beverage that is absolutely fresh and pure. The water comes out of the tree itself through innumerable little pores situated at the margin of the leaves.

Banana Diet in Typhoid Fever.

The doctor had a patient, a woman, who had been for ten days suffering from a severe case of typhoid fever. He had prescribed the regulation course of treatment, and had kept her on a milk and fluid food diet. She did not do as well under the treatment as he desired and he watched the case with more than ordinary care.

On the tenth day the patient, whose condition was serious, said:—

"Well, doctor, I just can't take any more milk. I would rather die than try it. And the loths I have been fed on fairly gag me. I will starve myself rather than try to force any more down."

The doctor realized that his patient must take nourishment in order to successfully combat the disease. But just what to suggest puzzled him. He thought for a while, and the story of how useful the banana was came to his mind. He determined to try a banana diet on his patient, whose stomach rebelled at the mere mention of liquid nourishment.

The physician asked her if she could eat a banana. She looked surprised, but with alacrity said:—

"Eat one? Why, doctor, I could eat a dozen!"

The physician had decided to give the banana a trial, and sending out procured some choice fruit, not overripe. The patient eagerly ate one. It was not long before she wanted another. It was given her. The doctor remained an hour, and during that time she had eaten four bananas.

When he left he gave orders that she be given all she wanted. But all other fruit and solids were strictly prohibited. The patient took kindly to the diet, and would eat as many as a dozen during a day.

Typhoid fever must necessarily run the twenty-one days, and at the end of ten days after beginning the fruit diet his patient was convalescent. Then the advantages were even more apparent. The remarkable nourishment of the fruit had not permitted her vitality to be so greatly exhausted as is the case when liquid nourishment is strictly adhered to, and she gained strength with unusual rapidity.

The splendid results attained in this case persuaded the physician to adopt similar treatment in other cases and in no instance have any evil effects been manifested.—Times Democrat, N.O

Military Bands of Europe.

The two leading bands of Europe today, which met in honorable rivalry at the French exhibition in London during the summer and fall of 1896, are those of the Grenadier Guards, of England conducted by the world-famed bandmaster, the Hon. Lieut. Dan Godfrey, and the Guard Republicaine, of France, conducted by M. Wettge. Both are composed of picked men, artists who have served a long apprenticeship in other bands previous to being honored and gratified by being called to join these. And when upon state occasions, such as trooping of the colors on the Queen's birthday, the Guard's bands of the Grenadiers, Coldstreams and Scots Fusilliers are massed together for combined effort, or the full complement of the Grand Republicaine is pouring forth glorious melody under the trees of Paris' great parks and gardens, one can fully understand how it comes to pass that their fame has extended so widely.

Our American orchestra conducted by Mr. Sousa is avowedly an imitation of the great French band. Lieut. Godfrey brought his band to the grand international musical festival held in Boston during the year 1872. This was the first time an English soldier had appeared in uniform in America since the days of 1812-16. Questions were asked in parliament as to the advisability of the step, and a special act by that august body was necessary to enable the band to leave the country. Belonging as it does, to the personal establishment of the sovereign, Victoria could have done us no greater honor than to send to us, clad in bearskin and resplendent in scarlet and gold, her favorite musicians.—The Chautauquan.

Thankfulness.

Thankfulness is a most becoming grace. Its spirit adorns all acceptable worship. Most people have at least a hundred reasons for being thankful for one for being sad and melancholy.

THEIR HONEYMOON.

It Was Theirs, and They Could Spend It as They Pleased.

They had just been married, and had sought the romantic shades and dells of the Zoo to while away the hour or two before their train should be ready to carry them back to their country home. She was arrayed in all her bridal vestments, including the long, flowing veil, that completely enveloped her figure—and then some was left over. He was a sturdy-looking chap, not much given to the study of theosophy, perhaps, but it might have been safely gambled that behind the plow he would be perfectly at home. That they were spending their first post-nuptial hour in a manner highly shocking to the ethics that are generally prescribed for such occasions never occurred to them at all.

Down the shady walk they ambled, she leaning proudly, oh, so proudly, on his arm. They gazed with curiosity at the beautiful birds of paradise, and mentally calculated that a setting of those birds' eggs would cost a power of money. Then they went to see the elephants, the buffalo and the various other sights that the groom had squandered a half dollar to see. Finally they entered the monkey house. Better taste might have guided them in another direction, but, as has been intimated before, better taste was temporarily off duty.

The comical, human like animals, that, according to Mr. Darwin, are the papas and mammas of the human race, looked with ill-concealed admiration at the bride, and chattered volubly, while the other spectators in the building, including two or three "old married couples," surreptitiously winked at each other and smiled.

Suddenly the bride became conscious of the attention she and her hubby were attracting, and blushed to the roots of her hair, all of which made her look prettier than ever.

"Oh, George," she said, "I think we have seen enough. Let's go."

"Why, deary," said George, "I wanted to see that big fellow that sits up there in the top of that cage," pointing across the room. "What's your hurry. Why not see all of them?"

"Why, those people, George—don't you see, they are trying to make monkeys of us!"

George didn't stop to think that his bride was reversing the Darwin proposition, but he grasped the significance of her bald English at once, and, with an angry glance at the malicious old married couples (who didn't have any business poking around there anyway), he led his treasure from the building.

And the wise-looking old married monkey couple near the door munched their peanuts and chattered on.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

INSANE SOVEREIGNS.

Many of Them Have Sat on European Thrones.

It has been said that no reigning royal house in Europe is free from the taint of insanity, and there are many actual lapses into insanity by reigning sovereigns on record. John of England was probably insane toward the end of his career. Henry VI. was distinctly an imbecile; so was Charles VI. of France. If Philip III. of Spain were alive in the present day he would certainly be considered a religious monomaniac George III. of England was insane for the ten years of the Regency, but this does not bring him under the terms of the question. The late Ludwig of Bavaria was a hopeless maniac but the most signal example of permanent insanity on the throne was furnished by Paul I. of Russia. Though he began his reign well, the French revolution seems to have entirely turned his brain. He forbade the wearing of round hats or any French fashions throughout his empire, forced his soldiers to powder their hair and wear long queues, obliged his nobles to stop their carriages in the streets and get out and kneel in the mud as he passed. He made and unmade alliances and treaties with the irresponsibility of a schoolboy. In fact, no sane man could possibly have conducted himself as he did in such a position.

French Opposition to the Conscription Law

The peasantry were weary of seeing their soldier sons return from hard campaigning with neither glory nor booty, and began to resent the conscription law, which tore the rising generation from home while yet boys. Desertions became so frequent that a terrible law was passed, making, first the family, then the commune, and lastly the district, responsible for the missing men. It was enforced mercilessly by bodies of riders known as "flying columns." Finally every able-bodied male was enrolled for military service in three classes—ban, second ban, and rear ban, the last including all between forty and sixty. Nevertheless, and in spite of all other hardships, there was much enthusiasm at the prospect of a speedy change for the better. In March, 1812, Napoleon could count 475,000 men, ready for the field.—Prof. Sloane's "Life of Napoleon" in the June Century.

Boils

It is often difficult to convince people their blood is impure, until dreadful carbuncles, abscesses, boils, scrofula or salt rheum, are painful proof of the fact. It is wisdom now, or whenever there is any indication of blood, to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and prevent such eruptions and suffering.

"I had a dreadful carbuncle abscess, red, fiery, fierce and sore. The doctor attended me over seven weeks. When the abscess broke, the pains were terrible, and I thought I should not live through it. I heard and read so much about Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I decided to take it, and my husband, who was suffering with boils, took it also. It soon purified our
