AUGUST 31, 1951
No Rain Makers Need Apply

August which is usually one of our hottest and driest months has gotten off the track this year so far as rainfall is concerned. While the most humid weather is proving disastrous to the potato crop, damaging early cut grain, and causing rust in the late grain, yet a wonderful foundation is being laid for future grass and hay crops.

The Grain Trade Again

In attendance at the recent C.F.A. meeting at Macdonald College, was Mr. George Melvor, Chief Commissioner of the Wheat Board which controls also the marketing of western coarse grains.

From an eastern viewpoint two improvements were desirable, greater stability in prices and a steadier supply of grain for eastern feeders. The latter felt this problem might be solved by the Wheat Board holding in reserve at the Georgian Bay ports, grain available for the eastern market. Mr. Melvor agreed to get the opinion of his Board on these questions and report to the C.F.A. In the question of stability in prices it is the opinion of the Wheat Board that due to this year's large crop the influence of export buying will not be as great as in the past year. This should help to decrease the frequent and wide fluctuations which took place last year in the price of feed wheat, barley and oats.

Traffic Controller

A recent announcement by the Dominion Government that a traffic controller would be appointed emphasizes the serious problem facing the west in moving this year's bumper harvest. The question of the desirability of having a traffic controller was discussed at the C.F.A. meeting, the opinion being that such a controller would hardly be endowed with the wide powers of that office during the war time and would quite likely not be too effective without them. Therefore, no recommendation was made.

Good Egg or Bad

Nobody relishes a bad egg and it is the responsibility of the producer and the trade to see that the consumer gets a high quality product. The last ten years has seen a marked improvement in quality with the establishment of egg grading stations, provided with proper cooling facilities.

Federation Objectives

The prime purpose of the Federation of Agriculture is not the improvement and strengthening of the Federation itself but is the improvement of the welfare of the individual farmer and the development of the farmers interest in his own problems and in effective organized efforts to solve them.

Scholarships at Truro

This week we would again call attention to the scholarships of $50.00 each which are being offered by Maritime Co-operative Services Limited to boys wishing to attend the farm course at the Nova Scotia Agricultural College.

In addition to the scholarships, a measure of assistance is available under the Vocational School's Assistance Agreement. The farm course commences on October 24th and ends March 26th. Those who are interested should apply for information to this office—Federation of Agriculture, Box 99, Charlottetown.

Strange But True

Although the Phoenicians made surprising voyages centuries before the birth of Jesus, the Egyptians were the first people to build really big ships. One mentioned by Celsus of Alexandria was 420 feet long, and required 4,000 oarsmen.

An 11-year old English boy stole a double-decker bus and took his kid brother for a drive through the countryside. The pair had quite an exciting ride and managed to smash a few trees and collide with a traffic light before the police took them under their wing and fined the youthful driver 47.

In the year 1821 workmen unearthed a skeleton in armour near Fall River, Mass. Whose remains was it? Most historians say Thorwald's, brother of Eric the Red, who was murdered by the Indians in the year 1003. If true, Erikson was the first European colonist of America.

Deep in the heart of Africa lies the city of Timbuctoo known in earlier days as the "Slave City," today as the "City of Storks." At the approach of an airplane, a dark cloud ascends from the chimneys and housetops. The cloud seems alive. The passengers rub their eyes in amazement. A moment ago Timbuctoo could be plainly seen in the desert sunshine. Now, however, it has vanished beneath that vast cloud, of storks unlimited.

In this weird, mysterious town, at nesting time, hundreds of thousands of storks may be seen roosting on every wall and roof. When disturbed they take to the air all at once, thus forming a vast cloud.

A city of 10,000 souls, mostly negroes, is ruled by Arabs who hide their faces beneath veils—these are the blue-bloods—a tribe of desert fighters, called Touaregs. They start wearing these veils at 14 years of age and never appear without them as long as they live. The women of the tribe do not wear veils.

IN MEMORIAM

MISS ANNIE O'BRIEN
The funeral of the late Miss Annie O'Brien, of Winnipeg, took place on Tuesday morning, August 27th, from the home of her brother, Cornelius to Sacred Heart Church, Alberton and was very largely attended. Requiem High Mass was celebrated by the pastor, Rev. W. E. Monaghan.

Miss O'Brien came home the first of July to spend her vacation with her brothers and to renew acquaintances with her many friends on P. E. I.

Her sudden passing at Sacred Heart Church Sunday morning was a great shock to her family and friends.

For the past 30 years she had lived in Winnipeg where she was a valued employee of T. Eaton Co.

With All My Love

(By Virginia Howes)

When they parted a little while later Betty had recovered her practiced manner of affability. She smiled and slipped her arm through Clare's as they walked to the door. But when they stood outside on the sidewalk her words belied the pose.

"Clare isn't your type, anyway, Clare. He lacks that certain refinement that the men in your set have—if you know what I mean."

She smiled and turned away waving, blithely before Clare could reply. And Clare stood looking after a moment, thinking, "Yes, I know what you mean all right!"

There didn't seem to much reason for going out to the airport again that day, after what Clay Hanley had said about Eddie's working hours being until 5:30, but despite herself Clare headed for there after she left Betty. There was no one else to talk to about what she'd found back of Roger's picture. Eddie would understand the plans; he'd know if they really were the originals of the design Clay Hanley had applied to his silver monoplane.

She drove by the place once and saw Hanley standing there on the runway, a few yards from the hangar, exactly as he had been standing when she was there earlier. "The Watchman," she thought to herself absurdly as she continued along the highway. And remembering the sight of him standing there, outlined in his khaki shirt and slacks against the white of the concrete runway, she thought of the scene as a picture. "The Watchman" didn't seem like a good title. "The Watch" or maybe "The Death Watch." Yes, that seemed even better. It was much more solemn anyway, even if it didn't make much sense.

After a few miles she stopped and turned the car around. Something seemed to be pulling her. She drove back, and as she got within sight of the airport she heard the droning roar of a motor or shielding her eyes against the sun she saw the silver plane climbing like a winged bullet into the sky.

CHAPTER XII

Eddie Franklin was standing on the runway near where Hanley had been earlier as Clare tumbled out of her roadster and ran towards him.

"Hello, Clare," he said, turning to meet her. His voice was flat, dull. His face and hands were dirty with grease and he looked tired.

"Eddie, look!" Clare exclaimed, pulling the onion-skin sheets from her purse. "I found them—the plans you said Roger had drawn. They were in a picture of mine that his mother gave me. He must have hidden them there just before—"

Her words dwindled off into silence because Eddie Franklin was not listening. After his first startled expression of amazement, he had grabbed the papers from her and started thumbing through them wildly. His fingers left grease marks on them but he didn't seem to notice. And then he found the one he was looking for and he held it in front of him for a long moment. His eyes were riveted to the drawing, except once when he turned the page sideways to read a small legend on the margin.

Then he just stared at the paper and, as Clare watched, the color drained completely from his face.

"What, Eddie? What is it?" It wasn't her own voice. It was some kind of automatic sound that came from deep inside her, expressing the question that her heart was asking.

But Eddie only shook his head and looked up toward the sky, hearing only faintly now the rhythmic drum of the distant motor.

"Eddie, tell me! What's the matter? Why do you look like that?" "It's wrong, Clare," he said, his voice hoarse. "It won't stand the weight—not without the check valves. There they are, see—"

He held out the page he'd been looking at, pointing to a score of symbols placed at regular intervals along the lines marked: "Hydraulic Tubes."

"What—what does that mean? What if it doesn't stand the weight—what then?" There was a tightening all through her, a sudden coldness as if she'd come into a frigid temperature. She felt herself shiver and her lips were dry as she waited for him to answer. It seemed an eternity before he did.

Dorothy Dix Says—

a boy 27 for two years. During that time I was true to him, but six months ago I decided to have one last fling before settling down. That fling cost me more than I ever thought it would. I lost the boy I loved. I've confessed to him and have tried to explain my actions, but he won't listen to me and won't forgive me. If he would give me one more chance I'm sure I could show him how sincere I am.

ANSWER: One of the greatest tragedies in life is the "last fling," or the "one chance" that costs the faith of one we love. Faith is at once the strongest and most tenuous of human bonds. It can move mountains, so we are told, and it can, in turn, be turned to dust by the faintest breath of suspicion. To be worthy of another's faith is an honor to be worn with pride and to hold at any cost. To throw such a gem away for one last fling is to cheapen one's self immeasurably.

You realize now how great is the loss of your sweetheart's trust and love. True love cannot exist without perfect trust, and it is unlikely that you will regain either. Your only hope of convincing him that you are sincerely contrite is to stop pleading, and show by actions that you can be true. Perhaps in time he will get over his hurt pride and give you another chance.

DEAR MISS DIX: Some time ago I became interested in a man and we went together quite steadily. Then I discovered he is engaged to another girl. He insists there is nothing wrong in our seeing each other since he is only engaged and not married. I have fallen in love with him. My problem is, shall I try to forget him or fight to get him?

ANSWER: If you want to do his fiancee a favor, fight to get him! She won't be losing much and if you're so desperate for a man that you'll take him under such circumstances, you deserve what you'll get.

DOROTHY DIX cannot reply personally to readers, but will answer problems of general interest through her column.
