

ROWLEY'S HOUSE IN SHREWSBURY

A fine example of a 16th century timber-frame building in Shropshire. Built by William Rowley, a draper and brewer, it now houses a museum of Roman antiquities.— British Travel Association.

Shrewsbury - Stronghold Of The Tudor Britain

As you cross the English Bridge into Shrewsbury you step back four hundred years. Not by the absence of modern amenities, but into the spirit of a close-knit, thriving town of Tudor England. Fine old black-and-white houses face each other across the narrow streets, church and castle in their midst.

Geographically, Shrewsbury is an ideal centre for exploring the heart of England and much of Wales. The Welsh border is only 10 miles to the west; northwards is the ancient walled city of Chester; away to the south-east Stratford-on-Avon and Warwick, and nearer home the rich valley of the Severn and all the variety of Welsh mountains and English hills and moors.

All through the Middle Ages Shrewsbury was a citadel of great strategic importance during the wars between England and Wales, and the turning point in its history came in 1485 when Henry, Earl of Richmond, later King Henry VII, slept there on the eve of the Battle of Bosworth. You can still see the old King's House where he stayed. Richard III was killed in the battle and his forces defeated, and Henry became the first Tudor King.

From that time Shrewsbury's prosperity grew, and its rich burghers built the beautiful timber-framed houses which give the town its special character. You will find them all through its quaintly named old streets—Butcher Row, Marold, Wyle Cop, and Grove Lane. Some of the outstanding buildings are Rowley's House, which now contains a museum of Roman antiquities brought from Uriconium, Ireland's Mansion, Owen's Mansion, the Abbot's House and the Market Hall. St. Mary's Church is one of the finest in the country with some magnificent stained glass which came originally from Trier Cathedral in Germany, as well as the wonderful fourteenth century English "Jesse Window."

The Lion Hotel is a fine old coaching inn where Charles Dickens stayed and another famous Shrewsbury name is Charles Darwin, who was born at the Mount, beyond the river.

Shrewsbury is famous, too, for its great boys' school, which was founded by Edward VI, though it is now housed in nineteenth century buildings.

Wherever you go in Shrewsbury—to the Castle, which in its present form dates from the thirteenth century, the beautiful Quarry gardens in the bend of the river, among the old streets and ancient inns, you will find different aspects of its long and varied past. But perhaps best of all, join the farmers in Shropshire when they come to market on a Saturday, for the spirit of the country people has changed little with the passing centuries.

ELLEN'S DIARY

O Good New Year, We Welcome Thee For 1958

We have now entered that strange trail which leads off into the unblazed distance of a brand new year. And surveying the misty veil which in a great curtain denies to humans any view of those reaches beyond, we in our knowledge of former new years past and gone, fancy that this road will not be unlike a country byway we had not heretofore been privileged to travel.

It will be all strange and new. But as we journey farther into its unknown ways we are confident we shall enjoy miles filled with every enchantment of travel, so happily full as to preclude from mind any disturbing thought of that stretch of way which is certain to lie more and less shadowed around some unfolding bend of way.

We shall reach summits to experience there those heart-warming items of living which being of the spirit serve to encourage and inspire mankind.

Yes, there, come to topmost heights, charming vistas we shall enjoy. And then dip down to those shadowed, barren places where the journeying is most toilsome. There without signpost to warn, we shall come sometimes to those miring sloughs that verge on despair, when at best, living is a monotonous uninteresting and each day a trail to endure.

But even there, in the midst of discouragement and sadness, we may but lift eyes to catch the radiance of sunlight reflected on the heights above. We may catch, faintly perhaps at first, the joyous trail of some blessed "blue-bird of happiness" there, see a flower of hope blossom, and find again eventually the loveliness and grace of earth. And always the delights and charms of the sunny, happy stretches of the pilgrim way, will surpass and outweigh those gloomy hopeless distances endured, and both serve to teach the traveller the lessons of life he is required to learn.

What has the year 1958 in store for farm folks? Who shall say? Who presume to prophesy? Mind reverts to the economy of our way of life, for farm-dwellers are by and large and of necessity a practical company of humans. Princes of farm products—what will they be? Which crops should we favor? What husbandry stress? How very many questions crowd to mind in regard to our livelihood as we look to this another year of grace! So many queries, and none we can answer. Time alone can—and will, as the days unfold.

We do know however that the days will come, the seasons too in their turn. Winter will melt away for Spring's shades along the farmlands; Summer bring remembered blossoms; Autumn the death-glorious of the year. These things we shall have,

Homemade Cherry Candies Are Delicious To Serve

By IDA BAILEY ALLEN

A tray filled with luscious colorful homemade cherry candies is different. Serve it to callers with frosty cold, red cranberry cocktail for flavor contrast.

These candies are easy to make, unusual and based on an American favorite—cherries. All measurements are level.

Cherry Coconut Peaks: Melt ¼ c. butter or margarine. Gradually add and mix in 2 c. sifted confectioner's sugar, 3 c. flaked coconut, 15 chopped maraschino cherries and ¼ c. light cream or undiluted evaporated milk.

Drop by teaspoonfuls onto waxed paper. Chill until easy to handle. Shape into peaks.

Melt 1 (6 oz.) pkg. semisweet chocolate morsels and 1 tsp. shortening over hot water. Mix well.

Dip the tops of the peaks into the chocolate mixture. Cool on waxed paper. Makes 3½ doz.

Cherry Peanut Balls: Combine 1 c. peanut butter, 2 c. fine, chopped pitted dates, 1-3 c. flaked coconut, 15 chopped maraschino cherries, ½ tsp. grated lemon rind and 1 tsp. lemon juice. Sift over ¾ c. confectioner's sugar and blend.

Shape into small balls. Roll in ¼ c. fine, chopped walnuts and hcll. Makes 3 doz.

Cherry penuche: Melt 2 tsp. butter or margarine over low heat. Add ¼ c. light cream or undiluted evaporated milk. Stir until boiling.

Add 1 c. firm-packed brown sugar and 1½ c. granulated sugar. Stir until dissolved. Heat until boiling. Cover.

Cook 1 min. Uncover and slow-boil to a soft ball stage, 238 degrees F.

Cool without stirring.

When the outside of the pan feels lukewarm, add 1 tsp. vanilla, ½ c. chopped walnuts and 24 chopped glacéed cherries.

Beat until the mixture holds its shape when dropped from a spoon.

while yet the earth remains." So welcoming the new year as a good friend and step by step along its virgin trail, onward in good faith we go! "O good New Year, we clasp This warm shut hand of thine, Loosing forever, with half sigh, half gasp, That which from ours falls like dead fingers twine: Ah, whether fierce its grasp Has been, or gentle, having been we know." That it was blessed: Let the Old Year go!

Friend, come thou like a friend, And whether bright thy face, Or dim with clouds we cannot comprehend, We'll hold our patient hands, each in his place, And trust thee to the end. Knowing thou leadest onward to those spheres Where there are neither days, nor months, nor years." Until Monday — — — Diary— Good-night.

HOUSEHOLD HINT

Color is an important factor in your life, so consider its psychology! Selects on you and your family when you decorate a room. If you are inclined to be nervous, for example, you will probably feel calmer, in the midst of the cool colors, like blues and greens. Experiment with yellows and touches of orange or red if you often feel the need of a lift.

MARY HAWORTH

Baby Talk Irks Husband

Dear Mary Haworth—My wife, who holds a responsible job as executive secretary in the business world, often acts like a child at home—though not at work. I imagine, as she wouldn't last long if she did.

For hours at a time she will talk baby talk, and cry and whine at the slightest reprimand. Yet if anybody drops in when she is in this mood, she immediately changes and acts like an adult.

Occasionally, when she has been acting the baby and a friend has arrived unexpectedly, I will say teasingly: "You missed a good show. My wife was performing her baby act." At this Lissa will look at me as if I had lost my mind and say: "Why do you tell such stories?" The visitor will laugh, or act as if we have a private joke.

SPECIALIST FEES

In other ways Lissa is very sensible. She budgets well, is a marvellous cook and very economical. She dresses attractively and is all that a man could want in a wife, except when she is acting the child. Sometimes she goes to sleep sucking her thumb, even when she hasn't been acting the child before.

I realize that she probably needs specialist help; but we can't afford that. Once we consulted a psychologist who said that to help her he would have to see her twice a week and his fee is $15 an hour—outrageous for us. And Lissa couldn't get off from work that often. So at that price I guess I'll just have to bear with her.

If I tell Lissa that she annoys me in her baby moods, it doesn't faze her at the time. But if I bring it up later, when she's being sensible, she either gets angry or promises not to act that way again. What can be done? I would appreciate your suggestions, V. Y.

TO MUCH STRAIN?

Dear V. Y.—Inasmuch as your wife goes to work and holds a responsible job as executive secretary, maybe it's because you don't make enough to support the household. This surmise is further supported by your testimony that she budgets closely and is very economical.

Is she trying to build a backlog of savings or investments too, as old-age insurance, for both of you?

What I'm getting at is this—maybe her frequent lapses into baby talk at home, are a sort of unconscious revolt against being so much the parent in relation to you; or the sturdy oak at her place of employment. Maybe she hungers for a much more sheltered experience of life, as a female. Possibly she's never had much chance at being securely loved and safely cherished, physically and emotionally.

In the event that love and devotion are the most you have to offer Lissa; and if you cannot afford the fancy fees that psychiatric specialists charge (in private practice), then why don't you try to be a quiet sympathetic listener, when she swings into her baby mood? Maybe if you were to really concentrate on her conversational output at such times, you'd be of therapeutic help to her—just by virtue of listening, fully and kindly.

SYNTHETIC LOVE

To a great extent, the healing aspect of psychiatry has to do with the fact that it is a purchasable substitute for intelligent responsible encompassing love—the love that listens and learns and

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Bernard of St. Louis. They were married recently. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Chowen, West Royalty. Miss Julia Doucett and Mr. Arthur Chowen.

Princess-Nurse Plans Happy Birthday Party

The lovely gray-eyed cousin of the Queen is being escorted everywhere by a gay 24 year old Guards officer, the Marquess of Hamilton. The Princess has also been a frequent weekend guest at his castle.

Princess Alexander whose birthday is December 25th is having her deferred party on Jan. 6 at Kensington Palace, the home of her mother, the Duchess of Kent. The Royal Court is moving en masse to make it the party of the year. There will be an ultra exclusive dinner followed by dancing. The Queen, Prince Philip and Princess Margaret will attend the celebration.

London papers are quoted as saying 200 persons from the cream of London society have been invited to the dance. Exactly who will attend the dinner has not been revealed.

The tall beautiful Princess, beautifully complexioned, combines in her features classic Greek beauty and British handsomeness.

The Princess has been brought up most democratically. She attended a private school and now has the pleasure of shopping, going to movies or theatre alone or with a friend.

She has her numerous Royal duties already—hospital visits, ship launches, school dedications, Red Cross ceremonies. Her hobbies include jazz and classical music. She is very good at sports and has won several prizes.

Her chief interest at the moment is nursing. She is a trainee at a children's hospital in London. There is not really any Royal protocol here. She is conscientious Nurse Kent to her instructors and classmates.

As all nurses after arduous duty enjoy a party, no doubt the Princess-Nurse is looking forward to hers too!

This kind of self-awareness is the end and aim of good analytic therapy. It tends to bring to light any "dissociated" fragments of one's childhood, that are causing compulsive symptoms—causing the adult person to act foolishly, over and over not knowing why. Once awareness dawns, usually the compulsion fades.
