Edmonton Had Fantastic Growth In Past Five Years

By JIM PEACOCK
Canadian Press Staff Writer

EDMONTON (CP)—The fantastic growth of Edmonton has left the city with "precious little" undeveloped property in its 43-square-mile area, says town planner Noel Dant.

The developed or built-up area of the city has doubled since he came here five years ago, he said in an interview.

Mr. Dant and his department have had problems of "phenomenal proportions" in drawing up plans for neighborhood units, residential areas each with a population or expected population of between 4,000 and 5,000 persons.

SPEEDIER INCREASE

In 1899, six years before Alberta became incorporated as a province, Edmonton's population was 2,212. That's as far back as city records go.

Today the city's population is almost 210,000, which represents an average increase of 3,700 persons annually for the last 56 years.

But, the last 10 years—and in partcular, the growth since 1951—have brought tremendous increases in population, residential development and commercial expansion.

The population increase since 1945 totals 97,608—more than the entire population of the city of Halifax. And of this, 50,400—equal to the number living in St. John's, Nfld.—have been added since 1951.

ACTIVE CONSTRUCTION

To meet the demands of such an increase in population, builders in Edmonton have spent $286,192 772 on construction in the last five years. Of this, $130,622,648 has been spent on erection of 14,490 houses. Another $16,139,500 has gone into building 333 new apartment buildings.

New commercial construction—which does not include figures for additions, alterations and improvements to business buildings before 1950—took $41,382,749. This paid for erection of 1,086 new business buildings.

These increases in population and construction of residential and commercial buildings have brought enormous physical changes.

Of the 48 planned neighborhood units, 30 have been completed and the dwellings and other buildings are ocupied. Nine others are nearly finished, and nine more are on the drawing-boards. All will be completed and occupied within two years, Mr. Dant said.

DESIGNED AREAS

Each neighborhood unit is a district centred around a school. Each has its own little shopping centre and a larger shopping area is located within easy access of groups of four or five units.

Mr. Dant's planning has set out each unit so that children and housewives need not cross any arterial street to reach schools or shopping areas. Main streets accommodating through traffic are set out in four lanes and each has a service, or side road on either side to provide safe access to and street parking for houses fronting on it.

Inside these districts, Mr. Dant has tried to get away from squared-off blocks and streets that mark older sections of Edmonton. He has set out the roadways in an orderly maze of curved and winding boulevards and drives which discourage or prevent through traffic, giving increased safety for pedestrians—especially children—as well as improving the appearance of residential areas.

GROWTH CONTINUES

Construction of schools, churches, hospitals and other institutional services has kept pace with the city's amazing growth. A total of $22,163,565 hve been spent on new institutionl construction since 1950.

Nerly 25 schools — including three modern high schools—and 50 new churches of all denominations have been built. A new polio hospital was constructed at the University of Alberta and a new maternity wing at the Royal Alexandra. Others among the eight public hospitals also have made additions and improvements.

Mr. Dant said there is no reason to believe the growth of this provincial capital is near an end.

Therefore, Mr. Dant said, Edmonton is attempting to expand its boundaries to make room for further influx. The city has applied for the right to annex nearly 50 square miles—most of it to the east of the present city limits—to bring Edmonton's over-all area to 90 square miles.
