Observance Of National Health Week In The Home

How can National Health Week be observed in the home. There are many ways in which health principles can be built into the lives of children—and of parents as well.

One of the most effective and least obvious settings for family education, in health or other matters, is the dinner table.

A question regarding health practices at school may start a useful conversation. It may develop from what children recall of a health film or a health education project.

Reference could be made to accidents experienced and how they might have been prevented.

Discussion should not be long or forced. There should be no ridicule of anyone offering a mistaken idea—rather a tactful, friendly alternative should be offered.

Parents should not dominate the conversation; rather they should be good listeners, putting in a few words here and there.

Disaster overtook the Princess Victoria in the northern neck of the Irish Sea. One giant wave struck her broadside and poured hundreds of tons of water into her hold.

For five hours Ferguson fought to keep his ship afloat. The vessel could not answer her helm. Ferguson ordered his crew to put life-jackets on the women and children and form a human chain to hand them up the slanting deck to the lifeboats.

The tragedy struck hard at Northern Island and western Scotland where many of the passengers live. Messages of sympathy came from the Queen and other leaders of the land; sailors and fishermen prayed in the trim little churches of coastal towns.

In this port, men and women, many dressed in their Sunday best, waited on a pier as the coast guard crews came in. Slumped in their dripping yellow oilskins, the coast guardsmen shook their heads.

There was no hope of finding additional survivors. Among those who perished were Maj. John Maynard Sinclair, deputy prime minister of Northern Ireland, and Sir Walter Smiles, member of Britain's Parliament from North Down.

Only seven bodies have been recovered thus far. All are unidentified. Identity of the dead is expected to be difficult to establish because the Princess Victoria kept no passenger list.

Millions Affected

from surging flood. But the situation appeared to be out of control.

Emergency calls for help came from mayor after mayor with such steady profusion on the radio network that it was impossible to draw a comprehensive picture of the situation or assess the casualties.

The Associated Press correspondent at Antwerp, Belgium's leading port, said:

"This is the worst catastrophe of the last 40 years in Antwerp. The Schelde river left its channel. Dikes in the harbor broke down over a 120-yard length. Ships capsized in drydocks. The telephone network of the city is almost completely destroyed.

Similar reports of chaos and confusion came from southwestern Holland, the picturesque area of hundreds of square miles of flat islands at the many mouths of the Rhine, the Meuse and the Schelde. This is land reclaimed from the sea.

Some authorities reported the sea was rushing through collapsed dikes so fiercely that rowboats no longer were of use.

Gales, coinciding with the spring tide, overwhelmed dikes that were considered solid, flooding polders below-sea-level areas and drowning farmers, rushing through the streets and houses of towns and villages.

Emergency calls came from at least 50 towns and hamlets. The low-level eastern part of Rotterdam, main port in Holland, was flooded when its river dike burst. Two hundred volunteers worked to plug the hole with sand bags.

Willemsdijk's 2,000 people were marooned on their house-tops. Two landing craft went to their rescue.

An area of major disaster was around Dordrecht, a city of 200,000 just south of Rotterdam. Graveneind in that area reported seven dead. Zwyndrecht, a suburb of Dordrecht, reported the first dike break.

The people of the island of Walcheren, which was flooded by Second World War bombing of its dikes, had to leave their land again to the salt of the sea. Waters rose three feet in its harbor city of Flushing.

Rescue workers faced the severest task in the province of Zeeland because of its isolation. So many attempts were made to reach them that few could go to the rescue of their neighbors.

In Belgium three dead were reported from Antwerp and two from polders north of the city. Seven dikes in the Antwerp harbor area were smashed. A ship in drydock broke loose and in drifting away damaged the Norwegian ship finally sank.

Chamberlain gave a quick rundown of his farm activities to some local friends a few days ago in these words:

"I have three hundred and fifty acres of land, and fifty dairy cattle. When the price was right I raised a lot of pigs, as many as three hundred, some years. I employ as many as four men in summer time but now I have only one hired hand."

"Throughout the summer I work from 6 a.m. until evening every day and I work hard—everybody mixed up with farming must—if he wants to make a go of it."

"I have too much land, and since hog raising, in which I had some good years, has slumped, it is hard to make a dollar. Dairying, of course, is my chief source of revenue, but all dairymen are finding it tougher these last few years to operate profitably."

"As a matter of fact," concluded "Murph", "I think I could do as well on a smaller farm on P. E. Island, as I do on my 350 acres in Quebec—and I have looked over several farms near Charlottetown in the last month."

The Islanders coach thinks he might have a fling at raising spuds if he moved to this Province, but he would still stick to dairying, and his Holsteins. Of his fifty head of cattle, he claims that about fifteen are real top-notchers which would compare very well with the best Holsteins in this Province.

If hockey was played in the summer-time the great would be the colorful Mr. Chamberlain—there is not any doubt what his choice would be between the rink or the farm.

Detroit. (AP) - Twice Clarence Campbell of the National Hockey League said Saturday night he likely will rule Tuesday in the case of Detroit's general manager, Jack Adams, who is accused of invention is better than cure. Keep away from people who have a cold. Stay out of crowds during this flu season.

IF YOU CATCH A COLD: Keep away from others, especially from infants. Cover your nose and mouth when you sneeze and cough. Use paper tissues, burn them and wash your hands. Go to bed for a day or two at the BEGINNING of a cold. Avoid drafts and chilling and wet feet. Drink plenty of water and citrus fruit juices. Eat simple easily digested foods. Go to your doctor about the cold that "hangs on."

Island Odds And Ends

Hon. Sherman Adams, who as Governor of New Hampshire, paid an unofficial visit to this Province in the summer of 1951, will be General Eisenhower's chief assistant in the White House. Already he has been called the "assistant president." He was one of the first to promote the "Ike for President" movement and was a key figure at the Republican Convention and in the Presidential Campaign which followed.

He was in the Province during Exhibition Week and was introduced to the race crowd one evening by Premier J. W. Jones. He made a very pleasing down-to-earth speech on that occasion, and impressed his audience by his sincerity and his obvious freedom from pose or pretentiousness.

Just prior to arriving at the exhibition grounds he had been trout fishing at Mr. Ben Taylor's pond at Grandville. He liked the Island very much indeed but had no luck fishing.

However, he spent some very pleasant days on the golf course of the National Park and was very pleased with his accommodations at the Links Inn.

Unemployment Insurance benefits are being paid to 1740 people through the National Employment Office, Charlottetown, at the present time. More than 1,000 of these claimants are rural residents of Queen's and King's County, known as "postal claimants." The remainder—about 700—reside in Charlottetown or within a radius of five miles from the city. In terms of money it is estimated that almost thirty thousand dollars is being paid weekly.

The present total of claimants is the largest in the history of the local office. After the war, when out-of-work benefits were paid to returned men, the claims total was approximately as high, but the money was paid from a special government grant and not from the Unemployment Insurance Fund.

Officials of the local office are of the opinion that the peak load of claims has not yet been reached, and that it will climb beyond the 1800 mark by mid-February.

Merchants interviewed in a number of rural communities report that credit cheques are being cashed for groceries and other necessities, with regularity, and that money is most welcome at this time of the year, with work actively at its lowest point.

Though his name is always linked with hockey, "Murph" Chamberlain, coach of the Islanders, considers his winter job a vacation from his Quebec farm at St. Sebastian, fifty-three miles from Montreal.

Farming is a serious business with "Murph", a question of dollars and cents. Just now it is hard to make a dollar says the Islanders boss, more especially since hog prices are about as low as the league standing of the Sydney Millers.

Chamberlain gave a quick rundown of his farm activities to some local friends a few days ago in these words:

"I have three hundred and fifty acres of land, and fifty dairy cattle. When the price was right I raised a lot of pigs, as many as three hundred, some years. I employ as many as four men in summer time but now I have only one hired hand."

cue could reach them.

The gale-whipped tide swirled into the naval dockyard at Sheerness on the south bank of the Thames estuary and sank the new submarine Sirdar at her dock and capsized the 1,580-ton frigate, Berkeley Castle. No loss of life was reported.

Parts of the Netherlands were declared under a state of emergency as the North Sea shattered dike defences and surged inland.

The toll in known dead was 37 in Holland and five in Belgium. The storm also battered the German coast and two persons in Dueseldorf were killed by collapsing walls.

13,000 Evacuated

Hundreds of tons of churning water crashed over Canvey Island in the Thames estuary off the Essex coast of England. Thirteen thousand residents of the island were being evacuated, and as dusk fell few were left on its shores.

Canvey's death toll was believed high. A large number of its population lived in flimsy homes along the sea front. Hundreds of these homes were smashed into splinters.

A wave-battered lighthouse crashed into the sea at Margate, a resort town on the English coast.

From one stricken area after another came reports of bodies found, and always with the added phrase: "many more are feared to have perished."

At Hunstanton, 12 bodies had been recovered and at least 28 more were missing.

Nearby Snettisham reported 20 missing and five known dead. Heacham had four dead.

The Suffolk resort of Felixstowe counted 17 dead and feared for many more.

Seaplane Base Cut Off

The R.A.F. seaplane base near Felixstowe was completely cut off and nothing was known of the fate of men there. A whole district of the town is built of flimsy prefabricated one-storey houses and water was reported above the level of their windows.

Twenty miles of coastline north of The Wash were inundated up to two miles inland and the water was 10 to 20 feet deep in places. Nine were known dead at Mablethorpe.

Four were dead at Skegness in the same Lincolnshire area, and 16 were missing. Southwold, in Suffolk, had one dead and four missing.

The River Ouse overflowed at Kings Lynn only a few miles from Sandringham, the country house where the Queen is staying. Twelve elderly persons drowned.

Hundreds of sheep and other animals were drowned.

At the height of a storm which smashed the sea front at Southend a fire broke out at a gas works. Firemen had to go by boat to put it out.

At Darford, too, firemen had to wade through four feet of water to put out a fire in a firecracker

The Moscow press and radio continued to scream against spies in the pay of "American imperialists" and lax Soviet officials who permit all sorts of crimes, ranging from petty larceny to theft of state secrets. Pravda said Saturday that the Soviet government had uncovered serious violations of laws on the protection of secrets. It warned that offenders had "the enemy."
