She Manages Well the Farm.

She manages well the farm,
This girl that is gently bred,
Though scarce a score of happy years
Have passed o'er her bonny head.
Fatherless, motherless, young,
Left with a tender brood
Of brothers and sisters small,
She works for the children's good.

So, up in the early morn,
She's out with a steadfast will;
She visits the garden field and farm,
And the orchard upon the hill.
The butter from yellow cream
Is made with her own fair hands;
She works with a hearty will to keep
This home with its fertile lands.

Show me a lovelier rose
Than the flush of this maiden's cheek,
As she gathers the apples rosy and ripe
Or rides the black horse sleek;
Show me a fairer sight
Than this same woman's hands,
Busied at daily household tasks,
As well as at tilling lands.

What though no father's eye
Sees that the work's well done;
Is not this woman brave and true,
Faithful as shines the sun?
Dressed in her homespun gown,
Living a healthful life,
Sowing good seed for aye,
Whether as maid or wife.

The manages well the farm,
This maid with the deep blue eyes;
With voice that charms like music rare,
In her low and soft replies.
Well will those children say
In the distant years to come:
"Sister, you have done well;
You saved us the dear old home!"

Lady Macdonald's Testimony on the Subject of Wine-Drinking.

AN INTERESTING LETTER FROM THE WIFE OF THE CANADIAN PREMIER.

(From the Messenger of Peace, England.)

Extract of a letter written by Lady Macdonald, wife of Sir John Macdonald, Premier of Canada, to a co-laborer and correspondent of Savannah, Ga.—I was myself led to give up wine-drinking after some reflection, suddenly, at last, on Christmas day, 1866. I had thought a good deal on the subject, but never made any decided resolution until this day, when at dinner with a large party, the conversation turned on total abstinence, one of our guests, himself a strictly temperate man holding high office in our country (then and now) said that practically

TOTAL ABSTINENCE WAS IMPOSSIBLE for any one society. I said, laughingly, "What a dreadful statement! I quite differ from you." He took me up warmly, and several joined in, all without exception agreeing with him in saying that the requirements of modern society were such that no one could be so singular as to become teetotalers without being more or less ridiculous, and that the fatigues, excitement and wear and tear of political society life especially made the use of wine, in great moderation of course, absolutely a necessity. I entered the lists, I scarcely know why, and declared I did not believe this theory. At last the question was pressed more closely. My friend, who had begun it, said that he did not believe even "you, yourself, Lady Macdonald, could or would give up your glass of sherry at dinner." I asked "why not?" And he went over with great force and clearness all

THE SPECIOUS AND DANGEROUS ARGUMENTS that are urged in support of drinking wine in moderation, ending with the remark that in Sir John's public position my being a total abstainer would do him great harm politically. This seemed too monstrous, so I said (emptying my half glass of sherry into the finger glass as I said so) "Well, I will try; henceforward I enter the ranks of total abstainers, and drink to our success in water." Since then, thank God, I have never found any necessity for wine. In health I can do my life's work without any aid from dangerous stimulants; in sickness I have invariably and positively refused to touch it. I have sometimes, for weeks together, days of constant occupation and nights of almost all sitting up.

POLITICS ARE EXCITING AND FATIGUING, and every temptation to try stimulants is to be found in the late nights of listening to anxious debates, and the constant necessity of being up to the mark late and early. I have had a great deal of nursing to do with a delicate husband and child, and this often during our busiest society season; and yet I have never sought strength from wine at any single moment, and my health is far better than that of so many of my friends who take a glass of wine, or a little beer just to give them a little strength. Thus I give you my experience, as far as it goes, to show that

STIMULANT IS NOT NECESSARY IN THE SUSTAINMENT OF LIFE, where it is unfortunately most commonly used. So far as mental and bodily fatigue go, I have tested the possibility of doing without stimulants to the fullest extent, in long anxious hours over sick beds, in sudden disaster, in long watchings and journeys where food was uninviting, and in many fatiguing and very uncongenial society claims. When I told my husband my decision, and that our friend said that it would hurt his prospects politically, Sir John answered with a laugh, "O, I will risk the prospects; you can be a total abstainer if you like." My example can and ought to help many similarly situated. My husband's long public career and position, only second to that of the Governor General, the Marquis of Lorne, makes our family a prominent one in Canada."

More Intemperance.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

On last Saturday evening, as the steamer "Southport" was leaving ferry wharf to proceed up the East River, a very ardent disciple of Bacchus, from Afton Road, a remote region in the rear of Scotch Fort, might be seen emerging from one of the city grogeries, and wending his devious way to said wharf, for embarkation in said steamer. On his arrival at the wharf, he found the steamer out some distance from it and proceeding on her voyage. With the significant declaration, "I'll soon overtake that h—r," he plunged madly in the tide, and swam in hot pursuit. The steamer's crew seeing his imminent danger, immediately reserved the motion of the steamer, threw him a rope, and hauled him aboard. Even then his conduct was very disgraceful. He was a real nuisance to the passengers all the way up.

Some two months ago another vandal from the same locality tortured the feelings of a number of ladies and gentlemen on the same boat by his drunkenness, blasphemy and obscenity; and on Tuesday last the same creature out-herded his former vagaries. He not only annoyed the passengers, but on his arrival at Cranberry Wharf he abused the ferry-man, took the ferry boat, and went madly astrift on the river. Some of the neighbors, through charity, watched his movements, and fortunately the boat stranded a short distance from the wharf. On approaching it they found the bold Ned fast asleep, and on their wakening him he violently threatened a sound castigation to them for daring to disturb his slumbers. I think it is full time the Charlottetown police should bestir themselves and see that proper order be maintained on the city wharves, particularly on the arrival and departure of passenger steamers, and unhesitatingly prevent all persons under the influence of liquor from landing or embarking except in proper custody. The masters of such steamers should also be more rigid in enforcing discipline and deportment aboard. I believe, also, that a good flogging, lengthy and severe, would be but a mere token of the proper deserts of those two young outlaws who are still roaming at large.

By giving this a small corner in your valuable journal you will ventilate a few facts, and much oblige,

Yours truly,
CENSOR.

The Shortest Road Across the Atlantic.

(The Capital, Fredericton.)

The new steel steamship Parisian has made the voyage from Liverpool to Quebec faster by three hours and twenty minutes, than any passage on record. The enterprise of the Alliance in making the magnificent and comfort of their steamers rival the Cunard and other lines that run to New York, is sure to meet with an unlimited reward. It is quite certain that a large share of the vast tide of American travel to Europe will come by way of the St. Lawrence, when the convenience and comfort of travellers is as much consideration as on other lines. Five days from land to land—eight days from port to port, will prove an overwhelming attraction to that vast number of people who dread a sea voyage. The part of the voyage along the St. Lawrence, and near to the straits of Belleisle, is mere inland navigation, with the advantage of being surrounded by some of the finest scenery in the world.
