Infant State Of Zanzibar May Become African Cuba

Revolutionaries seized power in the infant Commonwealth state of Zanzibar three months ago, touching off unrest throughout East Africa. Mystery still surrounds the origin of the upheaval, the men who arranged it and the massacres that followed. Western reporters are not welcomed on the African island but this account has been compiled after weeks of research among Zanzibar, British, African and other authorities.

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON

LONDON (AP)—Is Zanzibar becoming Africa's Cuba?

And if it is, how did it start on that road?

It appears that about three-score disgruntled youngsters started it with no planning, scant support, and saw the whole thing taken out of their hands, first by hoodlums, then by leftists.

The regime of Sultan Seyyid Jamshid Bin Abdulla, which had been in power since independence came on Dec. 9, 1963, was so busy tightening Arab rule that it exposed itself to the vengeful stares of the Negro nationalist majority.

And so at dawn on Sunday, Jan. 12 a band of no more than 60 young Negroes and Shirazis (people of mixed Negro and Persian descent) rose in protest.

The unplanned revolution was on.

By nightfall their very clumsiness, haste and lack of sophistication had brought sensational success to the startled organizers.

HATREDS INDULGED

In the days that followed, the hoodlum element indulged their centuries - old hatred of the Arabs and in a country-wide riot of violence. Casualties were estimated authoritatively here at nearly 6,000.

How did it all happen?

The road to Zanzibar's revolution winds through London, Moscow and Peking—but most authorities now agree it began in the island itself.

A mosaic of racial, class and economic animosities formed the backdrop to the affairs of the 300,000 Negro, Arab, mixed-blood and Asian islanders. The 45,000 Arabs made up the propertied, land-owning and ruling class. With a minority of votes they dominated the government.

The sultan's prime minister, Sheik Mohammed Shamte Hamadi, in the five weeks following the Dec. 10 independence day, began tightening the Arab grip. He invited an Egyptian economic mission to the island. An Egyptian was picked to become secretary to the cabinet. Negroes from the mainland were eased out of Zanzibar's police and security forces. The left - wing Umma (People's) Party under Sheik Abdul Rahman Mohamed Babu—who now is foreign minister — was banned Jan. 4 on charges of subversion.

All this heightened tension. And when rumors began circulating that a shipment of Algerian arms was about to arrive, members of the Afro-Shirazi Youth League, who owed allegiance to the moderate Sheik Abeid Karume, vice president but then opposition leader, took fright. They thought their movement also might be outlawed.

About 60 Afro-Shirazi youth leaguers thereupon got together and hastily arranged a plan of action for Sunday, Jan. 12.

With the dawn of that day, the 60, plus their supporters, struck.

It was at this point that a Uganda - born bricklayer, the self-styled Field Marshal John Okello, thrust himself and the gang he led into the limelight as the "strongman" of the revolution. Okello had been in Zanzibar about six years. Those who saw something of him later called him "plain nuts."

During all this time Karume was out of sight. Babu was in Tanganyika and appeared astonished when the news was given to him. But he returned as soon as he could. Both were said to have been upset by the excessive violence that followed.

By the end of the day the professionals, especially those with unconcealed left - wing links, began to mount the amateurs' revolutionary bandwagon. They included:

Karume, a longtime trade unionist, rewarded to be vice-president. Abdulla Kassim anga, named as prime minister, who studied in London and Moscow, where he married a Russian, and Babu. Arab-descended, former member of the British Communist party and a frequent visitor to Russia and China.

NO FOREIGNERS SEEN

While all this was going on, no foreign arms were detected, nor did they seem to be needed. Russians, Chinese, Cubans, East Germans were not seen either. Britons who have since quit the island are satisfied the rising was a local affair in conception and execution, with leftists joining only when the success of the rising had been assured.

The one man obviously out of line with the main thrust of the coup was Okello. Karume and his lieutenants repudiated him swiftly the day after he threatened publicly to hang ministers of the ousted regime. They also ordered him to ensure that the gangs he controlled stopped looting and returned their spoils. In the end Okello was deported to Uganda.

What has been going on inside Zanzibar since the revolution?

In the month or so after Jan. 12 the so-called freedom fighters disappeared. Arriva of 150 police from Tanganyika helped restore law and order.

The old constitution was abolished by decree of the new revolutionary council. Fiscal controls were imposed to control a flight of Arab capital. In all this time foreign lives and possessions were respected.

LEGALIZE REVOLUTION

By April, seven decrees had been issued legalizing the revolution. The sixth defined the national aim as the achievement of equality, reconciliation and unity among the Zanzibari peoples. Another renounced all Zanzibar's past commitments and obligations.

Either willingly or unwillingly Karume has continued to preside over systematic transformation of Zanzibar into a stronghold of socialism, 30 miles off the strategic seaboard of East Africa.

Such leaders as Babu have insisted the new Zanzibar's political and economic future must harmonize with that of its East African neighbors And it wants to stay inside the Commonwealth too. Either Hanga or Babu, or both, probably will attend the July meeting in London of Commonwealth premiers.

But the regime also has set about aligning itself with the socialist world.

Among the most patent signs:

1. Co - operation with the United States has been ended.

2. Virtually every Communist state is establishing relations with Zanzibar.

3. British civil servants and technicians are being fired and communist advisors are replacing them.

4. A new people's army and a people's police force are being set up with East European help.

In itself the rise of a tiny, 300,000-strong Communist state —with a budget less than the annual turnover of a big U.S. department store — frightens nobody.

HOST TO VISITORS

More than 200,000 tourists and other visitors passed through South Africa in 1963, spending an estimated $90,000,000.

Opening lead—five of clubs.

Dear Mr. Becker: My name is Siegfried Munchausen. You will recall I wrote you on a previous occasion calling attention to the great feats at the bridge table accomplished by my late and illustrious father, Baron Munchausen. I realize that his name has unfortunately gone down in literature as the greatest liar of all time, but I can assure you that his memoirs, which have been duly recorded for posterity, are accurate in every respect.

Not only do you have my assurance that his extraordinary adventures were entirely true, but you also have the word of his publishers as well as his estate.

As further evidence of my father's skill at the card table, I will tell you of a hand I myself recently played. It is presented to you in all modesty as additional proof of his genius, since it is well known that bridge genes are passed along from generation to generation.

I was playing with my three sons one evening and arrived at a contract of six spades. I was South and my youngest son—age three—led the five of clubs. It was at once evident that this was a singleton, but I had no doubt I would eventually make the contract.

I took the ace and cashed the A-K-Q of spades, my pride and joy on the left following to only one spade. This did not disturb me because I led a heart to the ace and drew my eldest son's remaining trump (he is only five years old).

When I then cashed the king of hearts, I discovered the hearts were divided 4 - 1. This might have stumped a lesser player, but I found the solution immediately. I cashed the queen of hearts, played a diamond and finessed the jack, and then led the ten of hearts and discarded the ace of diamonds!

As you can see, my son was forced to take the heart and lead a diamond, and I was then able to discard both club losers on the king of diamonds and nine of hearts. Most cordially yours, S. Munchausen.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
