The Crazy Romanoff's.

HOW INSANITY HAS RUN THROUGH THE ENTIRE IMPERIAL FAMILY.
(From London Society.)

In the recently published memoirs of Count Vitzthum, of Eckstadt, proofs are given of the hereditary character of the mental disease which afflicted the Imperial family of Russia. All the sons of Czar Paul I., like that unhappy monarch himself, who was murdered in 1801, became subject to fits of insanity. Paul I. had four sons—Czar Alexander I., the Grand Duke Constantine, Czar Nicholas I., and the Grand Duke Michael. Every one of them, after his forty-fifth year, exhibited undoubted signs of mental derangement. This was not fully discovered in the case of Nicholas I., until after the Czar's death. An English physician, however, the Count says, noticed the appearance of the hereditary disease in the Czar as early as July, 1853, and he then predicted that the monarch had not more than two years of life before him. This he stated in a letter to Lord Palmerston, the Emperor Nicholas died in March, 1855, about four months earlier than the date predicted. The Count appears to have no doubt that the Crimean war, so far as it depended on Nicholas, was the rash act of a ruler whose mental equipoise was disturbed. None of the four sons of Paul I. lived to be sixty years of age, and every one of them suffered from concussion of the brain after reaching his forty-fifth year.

Alexander died at forty-eight, a miserable man, moody and despondent, as Prince Metternich has painted him, "tired of existence." His brother, the Grand Duke Constantine, though not manifestly insane, gave frequently signs of mental disturbance, of which he was himself so painfully conscious that he did not think himself fit to be trusted with the reins of government. His conduct in the year 1830, at the outbreak of the revolution in Warsaw, will remain to prove mental unsoundness. He had to be entrusted to the care of his wife, the Princess Louise, who was cautioned in the same way as a physician in charge of a patient having intermittent fits of insanity. He died in his fifty-second year from congestion of the brain. The Grand Duke Michael was killed by a fall from his horse at the age of eighty. Some years before his death he had exhibited signs of undoubted mental disease, and his physicians declare that he was on the road to certain insanity. The events of 1848-52 were not calculated to allay the hereditary dispositions of the imperial family of Russia, but to excite and intensify them. There is something terrible in the contrast between the outward position of the Czar Nicholas, upon the bent of whose will the fate of so many millions in Europe was depending, and the alleged diseased inward condition of his mind.

Home Rule.

Some two hundred Irish Americans and other citizens of St. Paul, Maine, sat down, on the 7th inst., to a banquet tendered the Earl of Aberdeen, late Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, now on his way east from the Pacific coast. In his address of welcome, Bishop Ireland described the guest of the evening as the first Englishman who had ruled Ireland for the Irish, and declared the name of Gladstone would take a place with those of O'Connell and Parnell. The London Times will not tell its readers of this meeting, yet among Irishmen present you have lawyers, judges, men controlling railroads, and the business interests, representatives of millions of dollars of capital. The Earl, replying, declared such a demonstration had a peculiar significance at the present juncture in promoting the success of the cause of home rule. "We must recognize the fact that a speedy passage of the home rule bill depends on the votes of the British electors. I do not speak of whether home rule is coming but when, and it will be when the British public is disabused of its misapprehension as to the aspirations of the advocates of home rule. There are three classes of Irishmen with respect to this question: First, men of enlightenment who make a clear distinction between illegal and constitutional methods are too clear-sighted to believe an attempt to have Ireland an independent state can ever prove anything else but delusive. Second, men who while in the main holding similar views yet have a certain toleration for those employing violent means. Lastly, a section small, I believe, who seek absolute separation from England by methods which would certainly be reprobated by Irishmen as a race. With such divisions it is wonderful that the British voter is puzzled, but he is rapidly becoming educated up to the determination to support the peaceful revolution advocated by Gladstone. I see the Marquis of Hartington states that the unionists have lately been increased and strengthened. If this strength comes from the conservatives it is of little consequence, but recent elections show it does not come from advocates of home rule. The impulsive generosity of the Irish will be one factor in making an easy reconciliation."

The Largest Farm in the World.

In the extreme South-West corner of Louisiana lies the largest producing farm in the world. It runs 100 miles north and south and 23 1/2 miles east and west, and is owned and operated by a syndicate of northern capitalists. Their general manager, Mr. J. B. Watkins, gives an interesting account of this gigantic plantation, which throws the great Dalrymple farm in Dakota in the shade completely. "The 1,500,000 acres of our tract," Mr. Watkins said, "was purchased in 1884 from the State of Louisiana and from the United States Government. At that time it was a vast grazing land for the cattle of a few dealers in the neighborhood. When I took possession I found over 30,000 head of half wild horses and cattle. My work was to divide the immense tract into convenient pastures, establishing stations on ranches every six miles. The fencing alone cost in the neighborhood of $50,000. The land I found to be the best adapted to rice, sugar, corn or cotton. All our cultivating, ditching, etc., is done by steam power. We take a tract, say a mile wide for instance, and place an engine on each side. The engines are portable and operate a cable attached to four ploughs, and under this arrangement we are able to plough thirty acres a day with only the labor of three men. Our harrowing, planting and other cultivation is done in a like manner; in fact, there is not a single draught horse on the entire place.

In Brief, And to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature. The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existence. It is easily put out of order. Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cooking, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy. Remember: No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents. dy wly 1w 10 cents.

Boston Markets.

BOSTON, July 7.

Eggs—There has been a very steady market since our last report. Eastern extras are still quite scarce, and the small lots received meet with a ready sale at 19c. Good Canadian, N. S., N. B., and P. E. Island firsts are selling fairly at 15c, but some marks have to be sold at 15c. Western range from 14c to 15c as to quality, with some extra Michigans at 15c.

Potatoes—Receipts of new potatoes have been heavy for the past week, and prices have been ruling low. On Tuesday most sales were $1.50 to $1.75, and only a few extra marks reached $2, but yesterday, with lighter supplies reported on the way, there was a firmer feeling, and best marks were generally held at $2. The market closes steady at quotations.

Fish—Trade has been very quiet for the past week and there are no important changes to report. Codfish are having only a moderate sale. Hake, haddock and pollock quiet. Box herring in light supply and firmly held. Nothing doing in pickled herring. Now mackerel are arriving in small lots and meet with a ready sale at quotations:—

A Heroic Father.

In Toronto bay on Saturday evening, Joseph Ellison, a carpenter, took his two boys, Willie and Robbie, aged respectively, 10 and 8 years, down to the foot of Brock street for the purpose of rowing them over to the Island. He engaged a boat and shoved off from the dock, and had rowed about one hundred yards when Robbie, the younger, became nervous on account of the rocking of the boat from the swells caused by the Ada Alice. The little fellow became so excited that he lost his judgment and attempted to stand and fell overboard. The father, who was an indifferent swimmer, immediately plunged in and swam to the child, who was sinking. He was able to keep the boy above water for some minutes, but from the manner in which Robbie clung to his father's neck, the poor man found his own head forced under water, but though partially suffocated he still held up his boy above the surface. The other little boy, who had been left in the boat, was helpless, and could do nothing but cry. The backward impetus given to the frail craft when the father jumped was such that the boat had now drifted off a considerable distance from the struggling pair. The crowd on the docks could see what was going on, but thought that the father was teaching his boy to swim; but their cries were finally understood, and a man started out to them in a punt. The father continues his efforts till the punt reached the spot, and was just able to gasp, "Save the boy! Never mind me!" when Robbie was picked up and the father sank like a stone to the bottom.
