

The Res Rap

By Yvonne MacKean

I reach out my hand to accept Brad Pitt's offer to dance. I can almost touch him, when suddenly the school bell is ringing.

No, wait that is not the school bell it is the fire alarm. In slow motion I wake up. Shoes...I know they are here somewhere. I slip them on and reach for something hanging on the back of my closet door. Pants? No, a raincoat. It will do. I leave my door unlocked and go out into the hallway.

A number of pajama clad ladies are standing in the hall, still half asleep. I help direct them down the hall, while looking quickly at my watch. I groan inwardly.

The cold air awakens me. More pajama club members are gathered outside. The group slowly moves over to the meeting place. A number of clumps of people are huddled together complaining of the cold and the hour. By this time it is 6:30 am -- heck of a wake up call. The alarm continues to ring, and we continue to complain.

Suddenly there is mass movement and the hordes swarm back into the building. Some people are locked out of their rooms, thankfully my door opens. A glance at my alarm confirms my assertion that I am only going to get one more hour of sleep. I stifle a sigh and vow to enjoy my final hour. It takes a few minutes to warm up and fall asleep.

An hour later, I wake up to my alarm. I hit snooze. I did get some sleep, but unfortunately, Brad Pitt doesn't reappear in my dreams. I get up, still groggy, and slowly start my day.

Throughout the day, I run into people who have various drill stories. We all agree that 6:30 am is not a good time because some people only had one hour to sleep before getting up, and some couldn't get to sleep and didn't even bother trying. Although we complain, we know that fire drills are important, in case one day it is not a drill. The drill was successful, and security was impressed, especially with the head resident not being there and only one officer on duty.

A word of comfort to the first year students who complained about the fire drill -- just be thankful it was not snowing!

Dig This !

Yes, we have our new title. Thanks for all the suggestions we received. They were all great, but this one sort of stuck on us.

Okay, first the important stuff -- our annual Halloween party. It will be held in our lounge on the fourth floor of main, October 26th starting at 6:30 pm. There will of course be beverages and some munchies. There will also be prizes for the best costumes so go wild and creative! After the party we will be heading down to the Barn do their annual Halloween pub. Should be a great night for our 52 members and a fun want to gear up for the Halloween.

Also on the 26th, the society will be hosting a reception from 4:00 to 5:00 for Dr. David Keenlyside, the Atlantic provinces' Archaeologist with the Museum of Civilization. All are welcome, so if you are interested in this field of study or simply have some questions, drop in. Refreshments will be served.

The position of Sociology Rep. and PR Rep are currently open. If you would be interested in either of these positions or would like to nominate someone, pass names on to any member of our executive by Tuesday, October 24th. The choice will be made Wednesday October 25th and let you know next week who the lucky people are. While on the topic of our executive, it was brought to my attention that a mistake was made in last week's column. Our president is Jennifer Duncan not Jennifer Duncan. Although quoted as saying "I'm not in it for the fame and fortune," I still thought that I'd mention it. Sorry Jen.

Congrats to our 50/50 winner, Ferguson, who won a whopping $1400.00. We would like to welcome our new sponsor. Welcome aboard Labatt's. We hope that this is the beginning of a long prosperous relationship.

Finally, there will be no meeting Wednesday, October 25th because, well there is just too much fun stuff going on. We will see everyone during our Halloween party, although it will be hard to tell if members are there!

What is that statue in front of Kelly Building?

Anne McCaffrey, 1st year
Science: "Ugly."

Heather Parsons, 4th year
Science: "I have no idea...I've wondered."

Mike Kays, 1st year Arts:
"It represents the human body, that is, the student body as a whole. . . the upside down heart in the middle represents the friendship which everyone has if it were right side up it would be love. The hole in the leg tells us that we are all flawed, but only when we want to see it."

Chad Thompson, 1st year

Jennifer Matchett, Art
"No idea."

Rene Babineau, 1st year
Science: "To tell you the truth I never noticed it... might be an ostrich."

Ross Williams, 3rd year
