

Re-implanted Arm Of Athlete Said Making Good Progress

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP)—A person walking by Bob Swaffar's office probably would not notice anything unusual—a tall, fair-haired man efficiently operating an adding machine with his left hand while a cigarette dangles from his mouth.

Not until he digs out a book of matches and deftly strikes one to light the cigarette is it apparent something is amiss.

Maybe, too, an observer who doesn't recognize the former Oklahoma State University basketball player might notice he doesn't use his right hand as he climbs into his car to go for his daily one-hour hospital therapy sessions with nurse Judy Terrell.

For Swaffar, something had been wrong, although there's every evidence time will take care of it.

Last October his right arm was caught in the spinning mechanism of a clothes dryer in the university's athletic department laundry.

His arm was ripped off, midway between the elbow and shoulder, ending his basketball career.

REACTED QUICKLY

But, partly because of the quick reactions by team-mate Gary Haseman, a pre-med student, a team of surgeons successfully re-implanted the severed arm after an eight-hour operation at university hospital in Oklahoma City. Haseman had packed the severed limb in cold water and ice.

Parading before the commission have been trade unionists, farmers and ranchers; economists, driver organizations, private citizens, a prominent Communist, lawyers, politicians and investment men.

Boards of trade and chambers of commerce sent delegations and major companies opened their files.

ANSWER LACKING

And the one most recurrent question went unanswered—the question of how much it costs to produce a gallon of gasoline.

In contrast to the threats and furore raised at the time of its inception, the inquiry closed quietly Wednesday following a long summation by H. B. King, commission counsel.

Sitting in on the final sessions was the three-man Alberta committee of inquiry into gasoline marketing, which plans to launch similar investigation next fall.

Chairman Kenneth McKenzie, an Edmonton lawyer, says his group will apply for copies of all the briefs and a copy of the transcript.

B.C.'s inquiry was ordered by Premier Bennett after Cyril Shefford, a marxist Social Credit backbencher, threatened to bolt the party and sit as an independent.

SPARKS ARGUMENT

Mr. Shefford, a 44-year-old farmer from the northern constituency of Okanoga, could not see why gasoline—which cost Vancouver drivers about 40 cents a gallon at that time—should cost drivers in nothern Alberta about 65 cents.

His argument was answered by Douglas Brown, counsel for Shell Oil of Canada who criticized Mr. Shefford's brother John for charging a markup of 8.7 cents a gallon in Burns Lake—compared with the then current margin of seven cents in Vancouver.

"Before all these criticisms of the oil companies, start with your brother and yourself," Mr. Brown said.

The oil companies have stated that it is impossible to compute the cost of making one gallon of gasoline because gasoline is only one of many products manufactured from crude oil. They argued it was impossible to isolate the cost of any one of the products.

MAKES LE

Imperial Oil said it goes back today for gasoline in B.C. than it did in 1949 when oil prices were government-controlled. Provincial price controls, begun in 1967, ended in 1968.

British American Oil Company said the blame for the discrepancy in prices should be laid to distribution costs, dealer margins in rural areas and Texas and price to dealers is the "result of competition in the marketplace and generally equal" to that of competitors.

Standard Oil of B.C. said competition must be relied upon to achieve the best economic balance in production, consumption and price.

Shell, in common with most of the large firms, said it breaks even on its B.C. operations, with net profit of $5,000 in 1963 on total sales of $41,348,000.

The B.C. Automotive Retailers Association asked some form of price control and more freedom of enterprise for 2,000 service stations, around the province.

Police Network Proposed By Ont.

OTTAWA (CP)—A national teletype network to link police forces throughout Canada was proposed Monday by the Ontario government.

Premier John Robarts, in a statement to be presented to the federal-provincial conference, said Ontario shares the federal government's concern with devising means to fight organized crime.

A high degree of co-operation already exists—among police forces in Canada and the trend is towards a full exchange of intelligence data, he said.

The premier noted that a teletype system serving 120 police forces in Ontario has been operating successfully for several months. It might be that such a system should be introduced on a national scale.

"We urge the serious consideration of this proposal," Mr. Robarts said.

The Ontario brief also recommended that regular conferences of intelligence officers from major police forces in Canada be held to encourage the exchange of intelligence information.

SPREAD ACROSS WORLD

First begun at Stoney Creek Ont. 48 years ago, there now are Women's Institutes in the West Indies, Australia, India, Malaysia, Scandinavia, South Africa, the United States and Britain.

18-Month Probe Completed On Price Of B.C. Gasoline

VICTORIA (CP)—After 18 months of testimony, some of it highly technical, the royal commission inquiry into British Columbia's gasoline prices has ended.

What it will mean to the man who drives a car or the operator of the corner gas station won't be known until after the commissioner, Judge C. W. Morrow, makes his report.

The commission has sat in cities, towns and villages throughout the province. It has read scores of briefs, heard hundreds of witnesses and pondered hours of cross-examination.
