

Commutation Planned For 14-Year Old Youth

OTTAWA (CP)—Justice Minister Fulton said Tuesday Prime Minister Diefenbaker has already made it clear the cabinet will commute the death sentence of 14-year-old Steven Murray Truscott if such action becomes necessary.

And he said he is "very surprised" that The Guardian of Manchester has suggested the cabinet should usurp the functions of the courts which alone decide guilt or innocence.

He was commenting on an editorial in which The Guardian said Mr. Fulton's failure to commute the hanging sentence, imposed at Goderich, Ont., Nov. 30 for the rape-slaying of a 12-year-old girl, "outrages every human instinct."

Mr. Fulton said at a press conference that cabinet would not announce its decision on commutation until the time for an appeal has gone by. The boy's execution date has been postponed from Dec. 9 until Feb. 16 to allow time for an appeal.

An appeal could possibly lead to a new trial or an acquittal, Mr. Fulton said.

"Only the courts can make that decision. So we have decided to postpone the announcement of commutation until the time for an appeal has gone by."
