SEASON'S LAST BERG GROUNDS OFF ST. JOHN'S

The only iceberg within miles of St. John's, Nfld., and probably the only one left in the area ran aground this week almost in the middle of the harbor entrance. Here the Spanish trawler 'Da Wild Malgiore' gives the 50-foot high iceberg a wide berth as she heads out to the Grand Banks. (CP Wirephoto).

Cardinal Bea Working Hard To Promote Christian Unity

By BENNET M. BOLTON
 VATICAN CITY (AP) — Augustin Bea, the cardinal with a dream of Christian unity, now is in his 84th year but still works actively for a goal he believes is beyond his lifetime.
 Head of the Vatican's Secretariat for Promoting Christian Unity, the German cardinal has made such an impact on the ecumenical or unity movement that many regard him as Roman Catholicism's leading personality next to the Pope.
 His personal outlook explains much about his influence in that field.
 "I'm neither an optimist nor a pessimist," he has said many times. "Rather I am a realist, and I trust in God. Everybody who knows the situation realizes that the difficulties are tremendous."
 "On the way to union, mountains of obstacles still arise. We need a faith that can move mountains, and a charity to match that faith."
 Pope John XXIII created the unity secretariat in 1960 and asked Cardinal Bea to direct it. Before then the cardinal had won distinction in a church career touching on many intellectual areas.
 As a young Jesuit provincial in southern Germany he built thriving parishes, schools and colleges in the region from which Martin Luther and the Protestant Reformation sprang.
PUSHED RESEARCH
 As the leading biblical scholar of his church he generated a revolutionary new impulse into Catholic research on the Old Testament and scriptural interpretation.
 He was private confessor to Pope Plus XII at the end of the Second World War.
 Few would have predicted such attainments during his boyhood in Riedelshagen, a sleepy German village on the edge of the Black Forest.
 The youth was stricken with a lung disease at the age of 11 and doctors gave him only three months to live. A decade later he was given medical advice that study in Rome would kill him because he would be unable to stand the climate of the Italian capital.
 Cardinal Bea has been in Rome now for 40 years. Time has hunched his shoulders and bowed his neck, giving him the look of an aged seer.
 But he plunges into his work with a zest that warries the younger priests on his staff.
 Cardinal Bea arises usually between 5 and 5:30 a.m. He works late into the night.
 He personally writes about 2,200 letters a year, receives at most 500 visitors, attends 100 receptions, takes part in 100 meetings and conferences, delivers almost a score of lectures, and travels thousands of miles.
PLANS VISITS
 The cardinal has met, and arranged for the Pope to meet, virtually every major leader of a Christian church — starting with the historic 1960 visit of Dr. Geoffrey Fisher, the Anglican archbishop of Canterbury, and including Orthodox Patriarch Athenagoras, a d leader of the Episcopalian, Baptist and Presbyterian churches.
 He first studied theology at the University of Freiburg. His father was unhappy to learn the boy wanted to become a priest.
 He had hoped his son would carry on the Bea construction business and small farm.
 He studied at the universities of Innsbruck, Valkenburg and Berlin. When he was finished he had earned two doctoral degrees.
 In 1912, at the age of 31, he was ordained a Jesuit priest. He rose steadily in the order and in 1930 was appointed rector of the pontifical biblical institute, a post he held for the next 19 years.
 Father Bea's pioneering of new methods and standards in Catholic biblical research reached a high point in 1943. Official papal recognition came then with Pius' encyclical letter "divino afflante spiritu." It gave impetus to modern biblical criticism, and Bea's own theories formed the core of the papal document.
 The Jesuit scholar engineered new translations of the scriptures that were considered revolutionary. He also had a hand in papal documents reforming theological study courses.
 Within a year of Pope John's coronation, Father Bea was called to be a prince of his church in November, 1959, at ready 13 years past the retirement age of most men. He is the only Jesuit among the 78 cardinals.
 Pope John named him to head a new Christian unity secretariat on June 5, 1960.
 Christian unity has become a major long-range goal of the Vatican ecumenical council, along with the immediate goal of reforming and renewing the Roman Catholic Church. Cardinal Bea's secretariat has become a permanent agency that will continue when the council ends.
LONDON (Reuters)—A Buckingham Palace spokesman Thursday denied reports appearing in North America that Queen Elizabeth was planning to tour Russia. "The only places the Queen at present has plans to visit next year, are Ethiopia and (West) Germany," the spokesman said.
