

A bore is what you are to others when your space is preferable to your company.

The People's Paper Read by Everybody

Covers Prince Edward Island Like the Dew

Corporal punishment is likely to be ineffective in those cases where it may be necessary.

By Carrier: Charlottetown, Summerside $16.00 per annum. Elsewhere in P. E. I. $9.00. Other Provinces and U. S. A. $12.00 per annum.

CHARLOTTETOWN, CANADA, TUESDAY, AUGUST 19, 1952

12 PAGES

Morning Daily Founded 1887. The Guardian, Five Cents.

CANADA REPORTED FREE OF FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE

Toronto Constable Charged With Robbery

External Affairs Department Staff Boosted 10 Per Cent

By DOUGLAS HOW OTTAWA, Aug. 18 (CP)—Canada's External Affairs Department is getting its first infusion of new officer blood in two years and getting another Pearson in the bargain. It was learned today. Geoffrey Pearson, 24-year-old

Coming Events

- Clyde L. O. B. A. special meeting tonight. Dance, Morell, Wednesday, Burns Orchestra. Dance, Lot 65, Thursday, Luncheon, Burns Orchestra. Dance, Cardigan School, Wednesday night, August 20th. Ice Cream Festival in Canoe Cove Hall, Friday, Aug. 22nd. Dance, Kozy Hall, Georgetown, Wednesday, August 20th. Ice Cream Social in Long River Hall, Tuesday, Aug. 19th. Dance at Stanley Bridge on Tuesday, August 19th, cancelled. Dance at Caledonia Hall, Thursday evening, August 21st. Sandy's Drive-In Theatre, shows Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Fridays at 9 P. M. Try our Purina Finance plan, for feeding your hogs and poultry. Dillon & Spillett. New Zealand Parish Picnic, Wednesday, August 20th. Dance after. Dance, St. Charles Hall, every Thursday, 9:30 to 1. Chaisson's Orchestra. Festival and Dance, Mermald Schol, Tuesday, August 19th. Door prize "Blanket." Cleaning and buying Timothy Seed, Paying top price. Elmer Macdonald, Crapaud. Dance every Friday night, South Rustico Hall, Friday by the Charlottetonians. Ice Cream and Pantry Sale in Springbrook Hall, August 21st. Sponsored by W. I. Seven Mile Bay Chicken Supper and Bazaar, Wednesday, August 27th, 4:30. Tickets 75c and 50c. Farmers, ask about the Shur Gain Feed Finance Plan. For particulars contact your local feed mill. St. Peter's Legion Hall, Tuesday and Wednesday, August 26th and 27th. Annual Supper and Bazaar. Chicken Supper and Dance at Little Pond Hall, Thursday, Aug. 21st. Supper served 5 p.m. till 10 p.m. St. Peter's Parish Annual Bazaar, Legion Hall, Suppers 5 P. M. Tuesday and Wednesday, 26th and 27th. Regular weekly dance in St. Mary's Hall, Saturdays, every Wednesday. Chaisson's Orchestra Canteen service. Dance at Gordon Lodge every Friday night. Music by Robichaud. Sponsored by trustees of St. Patrick's School. Chicken, Ham and Salad Supper, Irishtown Hall, Thursday evening, August 21st. Dance after. Irishtown W. I. Institute Dance, refreshments and pantry sale, beginning at 7:30 in Wood Islands West School, Thursday, August 21st. Barn Dance, Fenner Stewart's, Brackley Beach, Tuesday night as usual. Air conditioned, good music and canteen service. Bus leaving 11 M. T. at 9:30. Barn Dance, Clark's new Feed Mill, Mt. Stewart, tonight. Good music. Refreshments. Admission 35 cents. Proceeds in aid of burned out neighbour. Just arrived, a carload of Pioneer Dairy Ration, Hog Feeds, Concentrates, etc. New Jute bags, priced to sell. R. L. Dickieson, New Glasgow. Notice—We will collect Poultry every Monday for Charlottetown. According to new regulations all poultry will be bought graded lot dressed weight. Cheques mailed direct from packers to producer. Please list yours with us early. G. G. Green, Emerald.

Three Other Men Are Taken Into Custody

TORONTO, Aug. 18 (CP)—Constable Ed Whittaker was charged with armed robbery today after armed men forced two policemen from their patrol car and drove away in it. Three other men were taken into custody in connection with the case. It all started with a turned-down license plate in suburban New Toronto, police said. Constables Jack Marshall and Bill Snarr said they followed an automobile after they noticed the rear license plate turned down. Later, the car stopped and the two officers approached it to question the occupants. Const. Marshall reached for his gun but a man in the back seat beat him to the draw. The men piled out of the car and ordered the two officers to walk into some bushes. They made off with the cruiser and their own vehicle. The patrol car was abandoned on a sidewalk. Const. Herbert Farr of the Ontario Provincial Police said he earlier had stopped to talk with a man he saw "finkering with his car's rear license plate." He said he spotted Whittaker in the back seat of the vehicle. "I knew him so we talked about generalities for a minute and I drove away." Farr reported the incident after the cruiser was stolen. Whittaker, with the Long Branch force for the last three years, was arrested at gunpoint as he left his home to "buy a paper" less than two hours after the cruiser theft. The others were routed from their beds. Whittaker, who had reported sick earlier and gone off duty, asked police if they were "joking" when arrested. Toronto police said they will question the four in connection with other robberies in the district. Both officers apologized to their superiors for losing their cruiser and guns. The superiors said the two did all they could under the circumstances.

Jurisdictional Scrap Stirs T.L.C. Convention

By JOHN LEBLANC WINDYBEE, Aug. 18 (CP)—A jurisdictional union scrap stirred the annual convention of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada soon after its opening today. An attempt to shift membership from the T.L.C.'s own small, directly-chartered unions to the big international and national unions precipitated the fight, with opponents of the shift winning easily. In the other of the day's two major controversies, the yearly assembly of the 522,000-member congress—Canada's biggest labor body—gave no encouragement to an attempt by one of its member unions to eliminate long-standing socialist planks from the T.L.C.'s 18-point "platform of principles." The attempt was made by the Carmen's Union of Transcona, Man., which wanted to knock out the platform's declaration in favor of public ownership of all public utilities, nationalization of banking and credit and government control of all natural resources. After long debate, a restatement of T.L.C. principles proposed by the convention's resolutions committee eventually went back to the committee for reconsideration, but without specific reference to these points. President Percy Bengough sounded what may be the main note of the six-day meeting in his annual address when he called for a concerted effort to bring about a new social order. (Continued on page 5 col. 2)

B. C. Herring Industry Hit By Price Slump

VANCOUVER, Aug. 18 (CP)—British Columbia's $8,000,000 herring industry is in danger because of rising costs and a world drop in fish oil prices of 50 per cent, Richard Nelson, president of Nelson Brothers Fisheries Ltd. of Vancouver, said today. He said that some of the companies in the industry "feel it is impossible to operate and have not been preparing their nets and gear for this season." Normally, Mr. Nelson said, gear is ready by now for herring fishing which opens in October and runs on a quota which last year was not filled until February. "A year ago, price of fish oil was 12 cents a pound," he said. "Today, it can't sell for more than 5 1-2 or six cents. The reason is a terrific carry-over of last year's stocks."

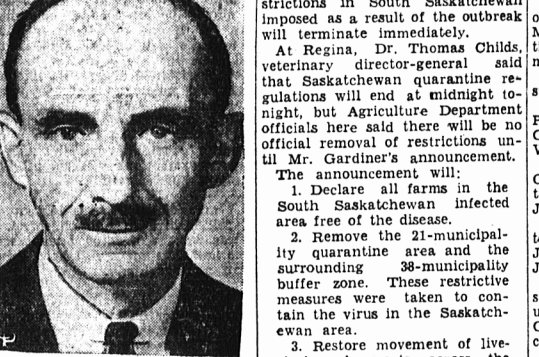

Top Brass Of Russia, Red China Begin Talks

By Eddy Gilmore MOSCOW, Aug. 18 (AP)—China and Russia opened top-level talks today on several specific issues concerning their economic, political and military relations. There appears to be great emphasis on the all-Asian aspects of this consultation among leaders of the two big Communist powers. It seemed likely that both countries wanted to talk over the general situation in the Far East, with emphasis on Japan. High on the list of subjects obviously will be the return to China of the Chinese Changchun Railway and the bases at Dairen and Port Arthur. Russia has promised to return these properties to China under a treaty or not later than the end of 1952. Chou-En-Lai, premier and foreign minister of the Chinese People's Republic, heads the delegation sent there by Chinese leader Mao Tze-Tung for the talks. Provisions for such talks were made in the 30-year treaty signed by the two countries Feb. 14, 1950. Under the terms of the 1950 treaty, the Chinese Eastern and Southern Manchurian railways, now known as the Chinese Changchun Railway, are to be handed over to full Chinese ownership and control by the end of this year. Port Arthur is to be returned at the same time, but can be used jointly by Russia and China as a naval base in the event of war. The railway is a lifeline for Manchuria, connecting China with Russia. Port Arthur is a naval base on the south tip of Manchuria, on the Yellow Sea. Dairen, which also comes up for discussion, is another harbor city about 30 miles east of Port Arthur. With the Korean war costing Communist China heavily, there is some indication that the Chinese want much more aid—both military and economic—than Russia has been affording. China may even want the U. S. S. R. to rebuild the arms-producing industrial potential of Manchuria because of the drain from the Korean war. One Western informant in London suggests that Russia and China might soon offer to negotiate a peace treaty of their own with the Japanese government in a bid to woo the Japanese away from the West and to divide still further the Nationalist-minded Japanese people.

Fear 41 Persons Lost Lives In British Flood

LYNMOUTH, England, Aug. 18 (CP)—A cold rain pelted relief workers combing the southwest coast area tonight for more victims of a flood believed to have taken 41 lives. It nearly swept this picturesque little town into the sea. Thirteen bodies were recovered after army engineers blasted and bulldozed their way through boulders, wrecked houses and uprooted trees. Twenty-eight others are listed as missing and presumed washed out to sea. Dynamite boomed as the workers tried to clear the rubble-blocked channel of the Lyn River, which overflowed Saturday, sent 920 families fleeing and brought an estimated 40,000 tons of hill-sliding through the town. More than 1,500 other families in nearby Lynon were driven from their homes. In Dulverton, 600 families had to find shelter with friends. First estimates put the property damage to the area at more than $7,000,000. With the main river-bed flooded, the Little Lyn still was blocked out of its course and too heavy rains could send it on the rampage again. Engineers said it might take 10 days to restore the stream to its old course. Other workers began setting up pontoon bridges to replace the 10 spans which were washed away by the floods. Amid the roar of blasting operations, in which the engineers broke up the larger boulders so they could be pushed out of the way, villagers sadly picked their way through the rubble, hunting for personal belongings. Police guarded the area to prevent looting.

Labor Minister To Spend Holiday In This Province

Canada's Minister of Labor, Brigadier General Gregg, V.C. (above), will arrive in the Province on Tuesday next for a brief holiday. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Gregg. The cottage at Dalvay formerly occupied by Lord Alexander, then Governor General has been reserved for the minister and his wife. This cottage has been at the disposal of the public for some time. The Minister will not participate in any official functions while in this Province, and his visit is planned as a relaxing holiday from his executive duties. Widely known here by army veterans, and as a prominent figure in Canadian Legion circles for some years, the Minister will be warmly welcomed by many an old comrade-in-arms. A skilled fisherman, he has let it be known that he will spend part of each day of his short stay on some pond or stream. As Minister of Veterans Affairs he came to the Island three years ago on a similar holiday. At that time Colonel F. R. Conrad entertained the General on a fishing excursion to Wiseners Pond, where he had a good evening's sport. Mr. Conrad will again act as the minister's fishing host, for at least one day of his brief sojourn. However the minister has no set program mapped out, and has requested that any arrangements made on his behalf be quite flexible. "I am looking forward with pleasure to a return to the grand little Island Province."

U. S. Market Big Question

Just when the American market will be reopened is a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the disease. But Charles Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, said today that the market will be reopened in a question which no Canadian official appears able to answer. Earlier this year, as the fight against the disease progressed, Canadian officials had hoped the U. S. Agriculture Department would drop the embargo 60 days after Canada officially declared itself free of the