

Kinkora Girls' Choir Sings At Double Ring Ceremony

St. Malachy's Church in Kinkora was the setting for the August 21st marriage of Mary Frances Linda, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Aylward, Kelvin Grove and Gordon Ernest, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Crabbe, Milton.

Rev. Harold Croken officiated at the double-ring ceremony. The altar was decorated with yellow, tangerine and white gladioli and the pews were marked with white satin bows.

The organist, Winnifred McKenna, supplied the music, while the Kinkora Girls Choir sang "Within Thy Sacred Heart," "My God Accept My Heart Today," "Jesus My All-My Own," and at the signing of the register, "Queen of Angels" and "Thou Art the Star of Morning."

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a floor-length gown of beau de soie with organza and one skirt of organza and lace.

Her bouffant veil of silk bridal illusion was held in place by a crown of seed pearls and sequins, and she carried a bouquet of tangerine and white starburst chrysanthemums.

The bridesmaid, Ellen MacIsaac, cousin of the bride, was in a floor-length dress of yellow beau de soie with matching tulle and rhinestone tulle. She carried a bouquet of yellow and white shasta daisies.

The junior bridesmaid, Dorothy Aylward, sister of the bride, wore a dress of yellow silk with white nylon and lace overskirt and a

MARY HAWORTH

Wife Wonders How Far Adult Respect Should Go

Dear Mary Haworth: Please explain the meaning of respect for parents after marriage.

My husband works long hours and has much responsibility. There is little time for us to relax together. I make few demands on him, as they are always turned down.

If I suggest some family outing on weekends, he is always "much too tired." But why does this tiredness suddenly lift, as he gets dressed to go visit his parents? If I object to this and indicate that he should give some time to the children and me, he says he was taught to respect his parents!

I feel his mother always hanging over my head, as if I am living with her, not him. I believe she often talks me over with him, things said later imply this. But to my face she acts fine. I have no desire ever to see her again, even though my husband has learned much good from his parents.

Our house could go to pot, repairwise and otherwise, and he would only criticize me for what he sees that displeases him. Little does he know of my frustrations, which I hardly dare voice, being already labeled a nagging wife.

I do my very best because I love home and family. I try to economize, even to raising and canning much of our food.

Our sons are disrespectful to me, a problem I don't have with the girls. Good manners are ridiculed.

Does all this tie-in with "respect for parents"? If so, I am greatly disappointed in marriage. I've been living with it for 13 years, and now I want to know: What is respect for parents? Your answer will reach to the deepest roots of our problem, I think. D.K.

DEAR D.K.: What your husband refers to, in himself, "respect for parents" is really a sort of self-centered, sixty-type, little boy brand of homesick attachment to his mother's leading strings. He is emotionally very immature (or unready) for the man's role of husband and father.

The normally maturing youth, on reaching the mid-teens, the onset of adolescence—a period of accelerated, unevenly paced physical and psychological growth extending into the early twenties—begins to break away, gradually or abruptly, from close sentimental involvement with his parents—particularly from the parent he's most influenced by.

This chapter of experience is a kind of hurry-up journey, triggered by Dame Nature, which takes the youngster out of the wraps of childhood, casts him into the swiftly changing currents of boyhood and lands him eventually, if all goes well, on the slopes of manhood. From this arrival point he begins to establish himself in a "life of his own," so called, to relieve the loneliness of being forever and finally weaned from his mother's womb.

Unless the man is "called by the spirit" to a religious vocation that imposes celibacy, usually his truly grown-up life begins, significantly, when he takes a wife, to be his "other self" thereafter, in the faithful sharing of joys, sorrows, burdens, leisure, personal concerns and the like.

Henceforth his adult life—if he is adult, not just a man-size child—is lived parallel as it were, to his parents' lives; but

MR. AND MRS. JOHN MILLAR

Aug. Nuptials Unite Couple At Bideford United Church

Wedding vows were solemnized in Bideford United Church on Saturday August 21st at 2:30 p.m. when Ruth Ida Mae, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Murphy, McNeill's Mills was united in marriage with John Ellis, son of Mr. and Harold Millar, Free-land.

The double ring ceremony was performed by Rev. Keith Whitney. Mrs. Leigh Craig, aunt of the groom, played the wedding music and accompanied Mrs. Millar. Mrs. Craig sang "Oh Perfect Love" following prayer and "I'll Walk Beside You" during the signing of the register.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was in a floor-length gown of pole de soie with lace bodice and panels edged with scalloped lace. Her gown had a high neckline and long sleeves tapering to lily points over the hands. The front panel of pole de soie was gathered with rusebuds to reveal a ruffle of tulle, and the back featured a bow at the waistline. Her four-tier chapel length veil of pure silk illusion fell softly from a crown of sequins and pearls, and she carried a bouquet of yellow sweetheart roses.

Mrs. Wendell Weeks, sister of the bride, as matron of honor wore a street length dress of blue nylon chiffon over taffeta with matching rose petalled hat and she carried a nosegay of pink carnations and mums, with streamers.

Mrs. Melvin Stetson and Mrs. Carman Murphy, sister and sister-in-law of the bride, wore identical gowns of yellow nylon chiffon over taffeta with matching rose hats and carried nosegays of colored mums.

Sally Weeks and Karen Stetson, nieces of the bride, were flower girls. They were in lace dresses similar in style, with Sally in pink and Karen in blue, and they wore rose hats to match their dresses. They carried nosegays of colored mums.

John Stetson, nephew of the bride, was ring bearer.

Lorne Millar, brother of the groom, was best man. Carman Murphy, brother of the bride, and Carman Millar, brother of the groom, ushered the guests to pews which were marked with white rosette bows centered with sprigs of white flowers.

Mrs. Murphy chose for her daughter's wedding a two-piece dress of blue jersey with white accessories and she wore a corsage of pink carnations.

The groom's mother was dressed in brown floral jersey with matching accessories and her corsage was of white carnations.

A reception was held in the United Church hall in Alberton. The bride's table was centered with three tiered wedding cake topped with a mini ure bride and groom and flanked on either side with tall tapers.

Edward Phillips proposed the toast to which the groom fittingly responded. Following the reception, the bride donned a two-piece checked suit with chelsea collar and white accessories. Her corsage was of pink carnations. The newly married couple will reside in Ontario.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Cricket's Tunes Seemed Inclined To Be Solemn

"Great harvest day we're getting" a farmer who had called by this morning offered, as he was about to re-enter his car. "Can't beat them, eh?"

"Great! James agreed. "And he twinkled, "as I tell the boys, we should be making good use of them!"

"The days shorten."

"Yes, that's commencing to show. And as the month wears on, we can't trust the weather."

"The sun will be crossing the line, and that doesn't come smoothly—there is usually wind and rain."

"Back in the years when I worked with a couple of neighbors at the harvest, I remember one of them would say, 'Let's get as much of it down and in stock as possible before the equinoctial gales catch us.' And often we were pleased that we did. Because once in stock, it was fairly safe."

"You have some done?"

"Oh, a little! James said. "A patch here and there. We're moving a building—this morning from" he nodded, "in the road. It's a bit of a granary. Don't know as we'll need it too badly this year!"

It came to us by way of the fields, drawn by a tractor. In no time it was settled to the rear of the barn.

"What a fine playhouse it would make!" his sister remarked to Peter.

"It would make a nice house for pets" Alex observed dreamily.

"But it's to be a granary". Peter shrugged.

"So be it!" she smiled to him. "Well, let's go take some lumps of sugar to Millie's filly" she proposed.

"And an apple" Peter said. The crickets' tunes today inclined to be solemn. They had to do with holiday over, and a parting nearing. We read this too in the signs about. Because no matter how eagerly the one about to leave the family circle may anticipate the change, nevertheless through little he said long thoughts attend it. The first of
