Hive Of Activity At Mount Stewart Strawberry Exchange

Ten chartered trucks are kept rolling day and night to keep fresh picked strawberries moving to Maritime markets of the Government Cold Storage Plant from the Mount Stewart Strawberry Exchange, the recently opened processing plant at that thriving centre.

"Speed is the prime factor in handling the berries," said Mr. Pius MacDonald, president of the company, "and we are working on a round-the-clock basis with a staff of 75 to keep the pack in first class condition."

As the berries roll in from farms within a thirty mile area of the plant, they are checked by Mr. Temple Murphy in charge of that operation who immediately releases them for transfer to the main building where the high pressure work really begins.

Here they are carefully fed into the conveyor which carries them to the moving steel platform which is of narrow slatted formation upon which thirty-six jets of water play constantly as the berries pass over their run.

On leaving the machine, the berries are conducted for 25 feet on an endless belt in a flow of water. Here a dozen alert girls cull out the unripe berries and any residue. The berries are then placed in an electrically operated water jar where they are stirred by a slowly turning worm screw.

When this process has been completed the "batch" is taken over by the weighing and packing crew who place the berries in one pound containers, some of which are labelled to the taste of the distributors on the mainland. The containers are then packed in cartons carrying 24 quart containers, and addressed to destination.

The truck loaders take the finished product off the line right to the waiting trucks and the load rolls away immediately. 7,000 quarts of fresh picked strawberries can be handled, washed, sugared, placed in containers, packed in cartons and on their way to destination in an hour," said Mr. MacDonald, "and we have no difficulty in turning out 800 cases in a 24 hour shift."

In addition to the berries being processed for deep freeze storage in the Government plant at Charlottetown, trucks catch the late night or early morning ferries with fresh berries daily for Halifax, Sydney, Fredericton, Moncton and New Glasgow.

Employment is given to girls from Morell, Bristol and other nearby points in addition to the Mount Stewart crew. The new plant has given a splendid boost to the strawberry industry and the initiative on the part of the Directors who installed the "Huller" is the first of its kind in the Maritimes, has met with the enthusiastic co-operation of the growers.

Mr. Warren McGuirk, manager of the plant, is hopeful that operations will continue until July 25. Questioned as to the possibility of engaging in packing blueberries, he was unable to say just what might develop in that direction.

Associated with Mr. MacDonald as president and Mr. McGuirk as manager are Messrs. Elmer Jay, vice president, Ken Jay, secretary, treasurer, Temple Murphy, receiving checker, Charles Murphy, day foreman and Oliver Smith, night foreman. About thirty directors, many of them farmers, are in close touch with the operations of the plant at all times.
