

Women's Institute Meetings

KILMUIR W. I.

Mrs. Dan Stewart was hostess of the Kilmuir Women's Institute. Mrs. P. W. MacDonald presided. The meeting opened with the singing of the Institute Ode; nine members answered the roll call with an exchange of flower seeds and bulbs. Three fines were paid. Eight visitors were welcomed to the meeting.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. The school committee reported that the pump had been installed, and the inspectors notified. The secretary-treasurer reported that fifty dollars had been paid on account. On motion by Mrs. D. Stewart, seconded by Mrs. E. Farquharson, it was agreed to loan $43.90 to the school trustees to pay the balance of the bill.

The sick committee reported that two sick calls were made, and two treats given. A thank-you message was expressed. Several articles of knitting and sewing were turned in to the Red Cross convener. It was agreed to ask Mr. Martin of the Film Board to show films at his earliest convenience. Arrangements for serving lunches for the evening were made. Mrs. M. N. MacCowan delegate to the annual T.B. meeting, gave an interesting report. An invitation from Heatherdale Women's Institute for entries to the Shur-Gain contest was brought to the meeting. It was agreed to accept and secure four entries.

The members were invited to the home of Mrs. J. Daley for their next meeting, when the roll call is to be answered with a question for the question box. Meeting adjourned by singing the National Anthem. The hostess served delicious refreshments. She was assisted by her daughter, Mrs. R. Downe. Mrs. Stewart extended a hearty welcome to a former member, Mrs. Frank Kyle, and presented her with a gift as a token of friendship and with greetings and best wishes from all for her future happiness. Mrs. Kyle graciously thanked the ladies for their kindness.

"Better take your defeat more calmly," counselled Mark; "you're not a good sport."

Landon gasped with anger. "I've watched you," he said thickly; "you've trepassed here — you've dared too much. Now, you'll get out!"

Mark's eyes met his mockingly; for a moment their glances ground on each other like crossing steels, then he laughed.

"Listen—I've won and I'll stay; the dinner was the acid test, you know. Do you think they'd like you for trying to cheat them? If you drive me out, I'll tell them what you did—we'll go together."

Landon whitened yet more. "You've got to go," he raged; "I'll make you, you—paid imposter!"

Mark swung round in pagan fury; he seized him and shook him. Landon was big, but in the other's hands he might have been a reed. Mark threw him aside like a helpless puppy; then he slapped the money, five hundred dollars, down on the table.

"Take it, there's the price; it's infamous, unthinkable; I repudiate it! I'll stay because I'm asked; because I will go out there and tell your story—if she believes it Mrs. Lynn will show you the door!"

Landon knew it; he reeled unsteadily on his feet; he saw stars, his face was ghastly. He struck the money fiercely and flung it in the fire. As the flames caught it and the costly smoke went up he heard Mark's tormenting laugh.

"Tell them, you've played a mean trick on your hostess; you've done a thing no gentleman should do; a thing to damn you socially; so and tell her! You'll suffer. I'll stay," said he with sudden passion, his eyes flashing their flame at Landon. "I'll stay—and you can't put me out—the wager's won!"
