BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

(By Thornton W. Burgess)
YOUNG TOAD GETS ROLLED
Sometimes with matters going ill
The wisest plan is keeping still.
—Old Mr. Toad
Young Toad did not think of being young, but he was. This was only his second summer out in the Great World, but as young folks so often are, he was sure he knew all there was to know. This is a very common feeling. It seems to be necessary that young

"Where are you going?" asked Young Toad

Young Toad was born in the Smiling Pool, of course. That is where all our Toads are born. He was very tiny when he left the Smiling Pool. He was born in the spring. He had a long tail then and no legs and he was called Tadpole by some, and Pollywog by others. Baby Frogs are also called Tadpoles and Pollywogs. Then he was more like a queer fish, but he soon grew legs and his tail grew shorter and shorter until he had no tail left. It was then that he started out in the Great World, turning his back on the Smiling Pool and going hop-hop-hippy-hop he knew not where. When jolly, round, bright Mr. Sun was shining Young Toad kept under leaves or grass or anything else he could crawl under. You see he cannot stand having his skin dry out. When the dew at night made everything damp, tiny Young Toad moved on. He travelled on rainy days too.

So at long last he reached Farmer Brown's garden. There he decided to stay. There were other Toads living there among them Old Mr. Toad, who had lived there more years than he could remember. Young Toad admired Old Mr. Toad and tried to do the things that Old Mr. Toad did. In that way he learned fast, but he was still a small Toad. When he saw Old Mr. Toad dig in and bury himself for the winter Young Toad did the same thing. Without knowing why, he dug deeply and there he slept all winter. When he came out in the spring he was a year old. He saw Old Mr. Toad making ready to leave Farmer Brown's garden.

"Where are you going?" asked Young Toad.
"To meet Old Mrs. Toad at the Smiling Pool, as I do every spring," replied Old Mr. Toad, and off he went hop-hop-hippy-hop.
For some reason, he didn't know just why, Young Toad didn't want to go back to the Smiling Pool. He was quite content to stay in Farmer Brown's garden. He was still there when Old Mr. Toad returned in the middle of the summer. From then on they were fast friends and Young Toad followed Old Mr. Toad about learning from him what not to do where not to go. It was from him that he learned of whom to be afraid and of whom not to be afraid.

Now in his second year, Young Toad felt there was very little more for him to learn. So far he had had no very great adventure and he had begun to think that there really was no one of whom he should be in great fear. Perhaps when you have been greatly frightened you have felt the perspiration break out all over you. Something like that happens with a Toad, and this is a form of protection for it is very disagreeable to an enemy who may pick up a Toad in his mouth. Flip the Terrier had once picked up Young Toad and had dropped him in a

EXPERTS DISAGREE, TOO!

Two nationally-famous experts almost came to blows about the bidding of the following hand in a board-a-match-team-of-four tournament.

South dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

♠ K J 8 4 3	♥ A 7 5 2	♦ J	♣ K 6 2
♠ Q J 9	♥ 8 6	♦ 7 5	♣ A Q 10
♠ 4 2	♥ N	♦ 4 3	♣ 9 4 2
♠ 8 4 3	♥ W	♦ A 10 8 6	♣ K 10
	♥ E	♦ A J 10 9 7	♣ K 9
	♥ S		♣ 3
	♥ Q 5		♣ Q 5

Two of the most favored teams locked horns on this board. When first played, South opened with one club and eventually landed at three notrump doubled. West led a heart, and since the declarer made the wrong guess for the club queen, the penalty should have been 800 points. East-West however made hash of the defense, and the actual outcome was only a one-trick defeat. South's opening bid at this table was certainly light, and whatever calamity befell him was of his own doing.

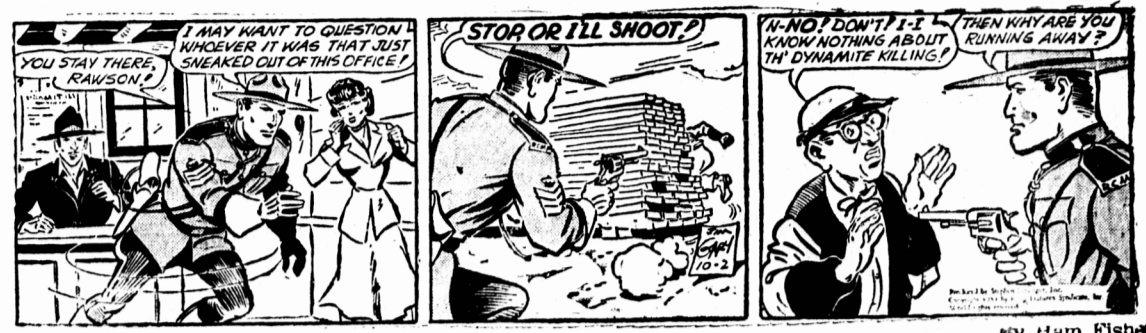

It was at the other table, however, that the bitter words flew, over the following sequence of bidding:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	2 ♥	Pass
2 NT	Pass	3 ♣	Pass
3 NT	Pass	Pass	Double
Pass	Pass	Pass	Pass

Here, West elected to open his fourth-highest diamond, and although this was not as good a lead as a heart, the result was a 500-point penalty when South made the same unfortunate guess for the club queen.
North was critical of South's three-notrump call, claiming that his own bid of three clubs had been a warning measure. South, however, countered by asking North where he had found so many bids! "With a hand as weak as that," he said flatly, "you didn't have any right to bid over my two clubs! And certainly, since you did bid hearts, you might have let me play at two notrump before the axe fell!"
There can't be much doubt that South was entirely right. North "bid his head off!"
