

MR. AND MRS. DAVID CAMPBELL

July Wedding Solemnized At Two Ring Ceremony

Baskets of cut flowers, pink and white streamers, potted plants, and an arch of green ferns with white snowballs made an attractive setting at the church of the Nazarene, Elm-dale, P.E.I. for the recent wedding of Margaret Edith, daughter of Mrs. Wallace Rayner, Alberton, and the late Mr. Rayner, to David Clair, eldest son of Robert E. Campbell, M.L.A. and Mrs. Campbell of Alberton.

The double ring ceremony was performed by Rev. Joseph L. Bright, assisted by Rev. Sheila Graham.

The pianist, Mrs. Russell Hardy, Alberton, accompanied soloist, Mrs. Burton Rayner of Greenmount, as she sang "Oh Happy Home" prior to the wedding ceremony and "Oh Father All-Creating" during the signing of the register.

Given in marriage by her brother, Burton, the bride was in a full length gown of white nylon organza over taffeta. The lace bodice featured a scooped neckline enhanced with a row of sequin and pearl centered medallions, and long lily point sleeves with tiny buttons. Double rows of matching lace trimmed each side and front of the skirt, extending from the bodice to the hem, and the full back skirt, falling gracefully from a large bow at the waist, formed a slight train. A rose petal headpiece held an elbow length veil of scalloped tulle. She carried a bouquet of red and white roses entwined with ivy. Her only jewelry was a pearl necklace, gift of the groom.

Mrs. Alder Pridham, sister of the bride, was the matron-of-honor. She wore a dress of blue sparkie organza over matching taffeta with above elbow sleeves, and sheath skirt with matching overskirt of sparkie organza, drawn at the waist with a white rosette. Her matching rose petal headpiece with scalloped veil was similar to that of the bride, and she carried a cascade of blue, pink and white mums with blue and yellow streamers.

The bridesmaids were Linda Spears, cousin of the groom, Summerside, Elizabeth Campbell, the groom's sister, Alberton, and Lorna Dignan, cousin of the bride, O'Leary. They were gowned in dresses styled as that of the matron-of-honor, in yellow, and they carried bouquets of blue, yellow and white mums with blue streamers. Their yellow headpieces were similar to that worn by the matron of honor.

Sharon Pridham, Montrose, and Nancy Rayner, Greenmount, both nieces of the bride were the flower girls. They wore white dresses identical to those of the other bridal attendants, with similar headpieces, and carried baskets of mixed shasta daisies with blue and yellow streamers.

The best man was Donald Campbell, brother of the groom, and the ushers were Raymond Coughlin, Elmsdale, Alden Ren-

ELLEN'S DIARY

A Heat Wave Shimmered Silky Above The Fields

"I'd say that we'll be hauling home hay-bales again today," Peter remarked, come by this morning as we lifted the porridge to the bowls — one green, the other pink — that take care of the first course of our meal... Sometimes through the open door, which allows now delightful summer scenes, a glimpse of the mill's gray gable through the spruce in the valley below will remind James — of years gone, when Island-over such mills were an integral part of community life and living. He will recall how sweet and nutty flavored was the taste of that old time oatmeal, and also remember, often with a chuckle, incidents that happened there in his boyhood which have remained long in his memory: some past ripple of laughter will come back to him, a witty saying of this or that one of the farmers who came there, or some logic which fell from older lips all of which serve now to keep memories evergreen.

This morning the flowerings on the lawn were amazingly fresh despite the lack of rainfall. Hummingbirds were on magic wing sipping at the sweet stores about, dipping into the colorfast nasturtiums as bees do, stopping at delphiniums' doors, favoring a marigold. And above the mill, toward the summit of the slope, lay a blue band of summer haze.

"I think that's what we'll be doing," Peter said.

"It's likely" James agreed.

"This is a fine day for it."

"It is" James said. So all the hauntings continued, trucks plying to and from a distant and unoccupied farmstead, now to store the bales at these barns, or again passing on to others of the name.

"And that" a young member of the crew grinned teasingly gathering in a lost flake to the escalator to end the saving here. "I'll make a bite for a sheep!"

"It will indeed!" James smiled.

"And now that crops are as they are, we won't take so much for granted, will we? We will know that no matter the promise of the spring, not every year is a full one. This time every bite saved will count for good. Gather it up, it will find a manger somewhere before the spring breaks!"

And the August day was hot. This afternoon, a heat wave shimmered silkily above the fields. The air was breathless. The leaves were still. Scampie sought relief in the cool of the cellar. The cat-kind, lazed in the shade of fencerow, and grove, or found a coolness in the stream.

The moon is veiled lightly but encircled, and within is a star. Can it be that there is a shower just ahead? Yet how pleasant the August night is, the air cooled now, and all prettily lighted. So beautiful such summer nights are, we sigh when pillows call us to rest!

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good — night....

Services Director Retires After Rewarding Career

By ROSEMARY SPEIRS
TORONTO (CP) — After 11 years as a hard-working director of services for the International Institute, Nell West has decided she needs a little relaxation.

She retired as head of the United Appeal agency's service for newcomers to Canada June 30.

But retirement will probably amount to no more than a few months at the cottage and then she'll be back looking for people who need help.

"There's too much to be done in this world for absolute retirement. I was brought up in an era when people got a great deal of enjoyment out of work and gave their all to it. I suppose I've kept some of that pioneer spirit."

Born Nell Wark, one of six daughters of pioneer settlers in Minto, Man., Mrs. West's interest in the problems of minority groups was first kindled when she became a teacher in a rural Saskatchewan school.

Here she saw what she has seen often since — adults trying to adapt to life in a new country while preserving their own traditions and culture for their children.

TURNTOWN TO WELFARE

This experience so interested her that Nell Wark put herself through university in Manitoba and at the University of Chicago.

She was one of the first women in Canada to obtain professional standing in social work.

In the '20s and '30s she set up the departments of welfare of three Ontario cities, Windsor, St. Catharines and Hamilton, and in 1934 became Ontario's assistant deputy minister of welfare. It was the first time a woman had held the post.

Married in 1940 to a "Victorian" husband who wanted her to stay home, Mrs. West retired for a while but in 1943 was appointed director of women's voluntary services in the department of national war services in Ottawa.

She was widowed in the same year and returned to social work. In 1954 she joined the International Institute.

"My work here has been a fascinating and rewarding experience," she said. "But now I'm leaving I'm worried. I need much more community support to do the job."

Her 16 multi-lingual staff members work on shifts to keep the institute open 18 hours a day.

JOBS POSE PROBLEM

Mrs. West believes New Canadians have much to give Canada and says she tries to work "with" rather than "for" the newcomers.

"Canadians shouldn't try to superimpose their attitudes and opinions on these people. If we are open-minded in dealing with New Canadians both groups will grow and change."

The Institute provides counselling, English classes and social and recreational opportunities for 71 different nationalities.

Mrs. West says housing and unemployment are the two greatest problems facing New Canadians.

"So often an employer will insist that a man who has been well-trained in his own country must have Canadian experience before he will be taken on. But how can he get it if no one will hire him?"

"I have had men plead with me to telephone an employer and say they will work for nothing until they prove they can do the job."

Problems like these will follow Mrs. West in her retirement. She said she is thinking of doing a study of what happens when Canadian-born children find themselves in a minority among immigrant schoolmates.

"There are so many things to be done before we'll have real unity in this country."
